It's important that donations are made to a variety of these campaigns because while all are in the general area of the campsite and do communicate, the different campaigns don't always or can't always share different resources. It has come to my attention that this regained popularity in recent weeks. As the author, I'm deeply humbled by the support in the form of reblogs and likes even despite the crass language. I'm not Lakota or from the areas of these tribes. I'm from a Pueblo in New Mexico (shout-out to the Pueblo camp at standing Rock!) And Navajo Nation. I made this post at s tumultuous time in my life when I had accrued so much capital and privilege in the white man's world. Back when these were working links, I was a community organizer that went into a post traumatic stress disorder episode while this post was getting popular 2 years ago when Standing Rock was still at camp. I ask folks to reblog this out of respect to the many people and messages passed that allows for campaigns like these to exist. I'll never know how much was raised but know that y'all were a part of something huge and important. That two years is not a long time and progress is like watching grass grow.

#like when they pass a mirror and make a face and mess with their hair a little #or when you hear someone singing in their car with the windows rolled up as they drive past you #i don't know how to express this i just. people are people and it makes me so sad and filled up sometimes

I love seeing grown humans setting about little creative tasks out of boredom and then looking quietly pleased with themselves, like maybe a middle-aged woman on her train home from work manages to make a tower out of empty coffee creamers and gazes at it proudly for a few seconds.

I love seeing other people make the overblown OOPS I FORGOT SOMETHING performance for no-one that most of us do when we have to turn around in the middle of the pavement.

I love seeing stony-faced people in queues unable to contain a smile when a baby looking over its mother's shoulder in front of them locks eyes and does that astonished stare.

brittajj26

- when someone is standing in line and they don't quite dance to the music playing, but you can SEE their head bop and them mouthing the words

- when someone thinks no one's paying attention and they sing-talk themselves thru a task

- when they laugh or try to hide a laugh when looking at their phone

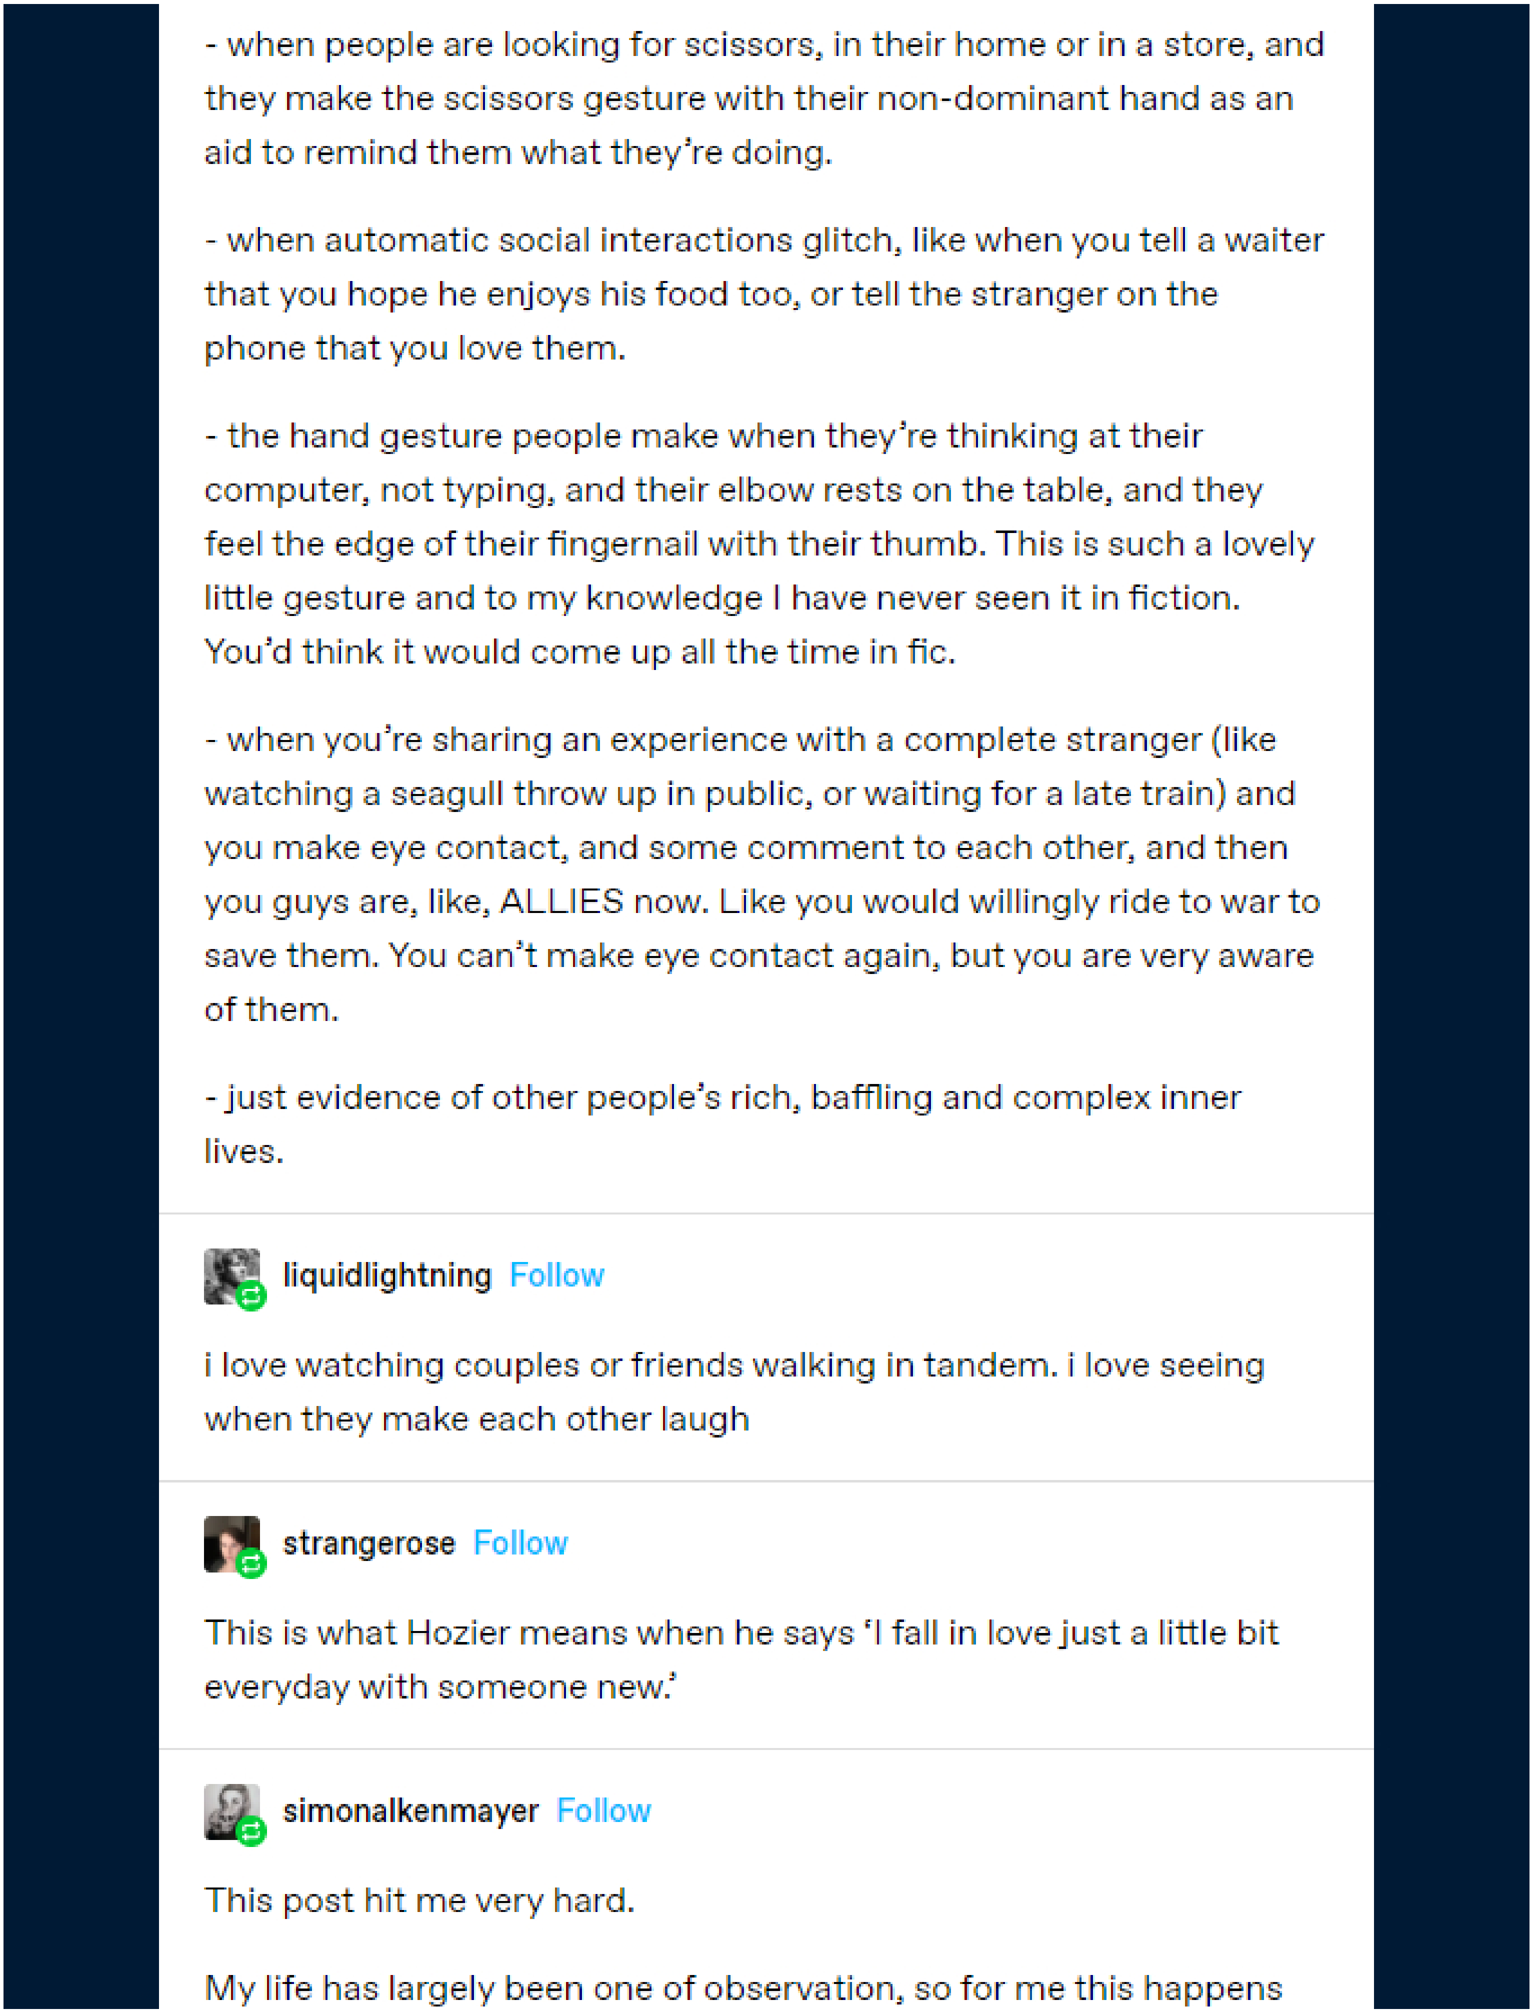
elodieunderglass

- when someone does the thing where they enter another space (such as a supermarket aisle) striding with total purpose, then suddenly forget what they're doing/looking for, and stop there looking blank for a millisecond while they reboot.



- when people are looking for scissors, in their home or in a store, and they make the scissors gesture with their non-dominant hand as an aid to remind them what they're doing.

- when automatic social interactions glitch, like when you tell a waiter that you hope he enjoys his food too, or tell the stranger on the phone that you love them.

- the hand gesture people make when they're thinking at their computer, not typing, and their elbow rests on the table, and they feel the edge of their fingernail with their thumb. This is such a lovely little gesture and to my knowledge I have never seen it in fiction. You'd think it would come up all the time in fic.

- when you're sharing an experience with a complete stranger (like watching a seagull throw up in public, or waiting for a late train) and you make eye contact, and some comment to each other, and then you guys are, like, ALLIES now. Like you would willingly ride to war to save them. You can't make eye contact again, but you are very aware of them.

- just evidence of other people's rich, baffling and complex inner lives.

If you have a Duolingo account, please consider upvoting this request to add Coptic to their language courses.

Coptic is the final stage of the Egyptian language. It is currently endangered, with less than 300 Egyptians speaking it as their native tongue.

It would mean a great deal to indigenous Egyptians in the Coptic community to have our language preserved, and this would be a huge step forward.

If you don't have a Duolingo account, consider sharing this with those who might. Thank you! <3 some tweets re: chucklefish for those of you who have been out of the loop like i have. many, many artists were exploited and never paid a single cent for their work on starbound.

while stardew is 100% a creation by concernedape and he split with chucklefish last year (which was the game's former publisher), i think it's important to know since CF is currently in charge of the switch and mobile ports (though sickhead and secret police are the actual porting teams behind it).

and some stardew specific info from twitter user @magicclueless: "For a case like Stardew Valley's, if you don't want money to go to Chucklefish, buy the PC/PS4/XB1/Vita versions or directly support ConcernedApe by buying his music on Bandcamp."

It's now day 59 of the quarantine. I realized I gained 10lbs. I could no longer fit certain clothes so I decided to take action. Magically, this video was recommended to me. YouTube has a canny way of reading your thoughts. I suspect they have psychics on staff...who knows.

So I decided to risk my life by going to the grocery store like Will Smith going outside in I Am Legend. I knew the infected were out there but these ingredients in the video I needed for the right sustenance. The store was almost empty. What a sigh of relief. I rushed to get my items and leave.

I get home and cheerfully prep the ingredients. I decide to add garlic and cayenne pepper...I shouldn't have done that. I cook everything to perfection and when it was done, I marveled in my masterpiece.

I then scoop some of this heavenly greenery or so I thought into a bowl to partake in the first feast of my weight loss journey. I finish it within 5 mins. It tasted amazing. I decide to go and relax....and then it started.

What I thought was a simple poot turned into a nonstop marathon of flatulence. I felt like one of those deep water methane reservoirs erupted and started releasing everything. And the smell, oh God the smell. The garlic didn't help. It smelled like a massive herd of animals crawled in my ass and went extinct. Then started rotting. I'm afraid to sleep in my room with the doors closed out of fear I'll end up in a gas chamber like they do in basic training in the military. I can't even walk past my stove out of fear my sphincter will release what could only be the end of my existence. Lord help me. I should've came to the comments first. Now for the next several days I'll be producing more natural resources than a deep sea well pumping natural gas.

Y'all pray for me.

As much as I mildly despair about the functionality of Tumblr, I'm forever grateful we don't have the creative interface of other social media platforms.

I keep seeing youtubers talking about how the new algorithm on their creative dash is so detrimental to their mental health, both in terms of how they feel about themselves as creators and the content they make—dreading to find out their performance rating, regardless of whether they enjoyed it or not. And it's the same across multiple other platforms, TickTock, Facebook, Instagram. Fuck, I've even seen people with business accounts complaining on Twitter.

And then there's Tumblr. Where sometimes you can't find your own posts even though you know you tagged it, time stamps are hidden in the ellipses at the top right hand corner of the post, your bread recipe keeps getting flagged as porn, too much punctuation causes asks not to send, and checking your activity feed causes the app to crash. You want to know your trending numbers? You want to know what's performing well? Fuck you, guess.

Unfortunately these are all reasons the website isn't profitable and with the recent takeover by Apollo, it's increasingly likely we'll get shut down.

I doubt it, mainly because Automattic currently owns Tumblr, the folks who own and run WordPress. So they're used to propping up janky coding for minimal profit.

It's why there have been some actual improvements lately that constitute to being actual improvements. Unfortunately, it still breaks shit because the coding is horrendous, but they are fixing things. Trying to...

I really wanna change, while I know it won't help too much at least it'll be a small step...

@salt-gremlin @babygirlalaura understand that this is a complicated process that you will fuck up. learn how to apologize for those fuckups without turning it into a groveling session or making it all about you. understand that most of the time, the best thing you can do when poc are speaking is hold your tongue, even if you're adding something positive. unless we are asking for it, your input will probably be redundant and distract other white people from the points we were making in the first place.

follow and talk to people of color, not just because you want to learn, but because you like them. dont treat us like we're fucking here just to inform you. we will talk about the issues that are important to use and you'll learn more from treating us as peers than learning about racism through a white middleman or only following us when you deem us educational enough. support trusted organizations, grassroots efforts, and individuals in need, preferably monetarily.

look into lgbt history and how poc, especially Black trans women in american LGBT history, have bolstered the community. also, for lgbt specific issues, understand that white supremacy is perpetuated by lgbt people all the time, especially prevalent in transphobia/transmisogyny when trans and gnc poc are harassed for not conforming to white-centric gender roles.

Gonna pitch a movie to Disney that explains the only reason the hunter shot Bambi's mom is because he raised a lost baby deer when he was younger, but the deer grew up and stole his family's fortune before skewering his parents on his antlers and running off, and now he has to live off the land hunting deer because he's broke.

Fun fact! He did this because Jonathan Frakes had a back problem. It was easier for him to do this pokegeek151 Follow

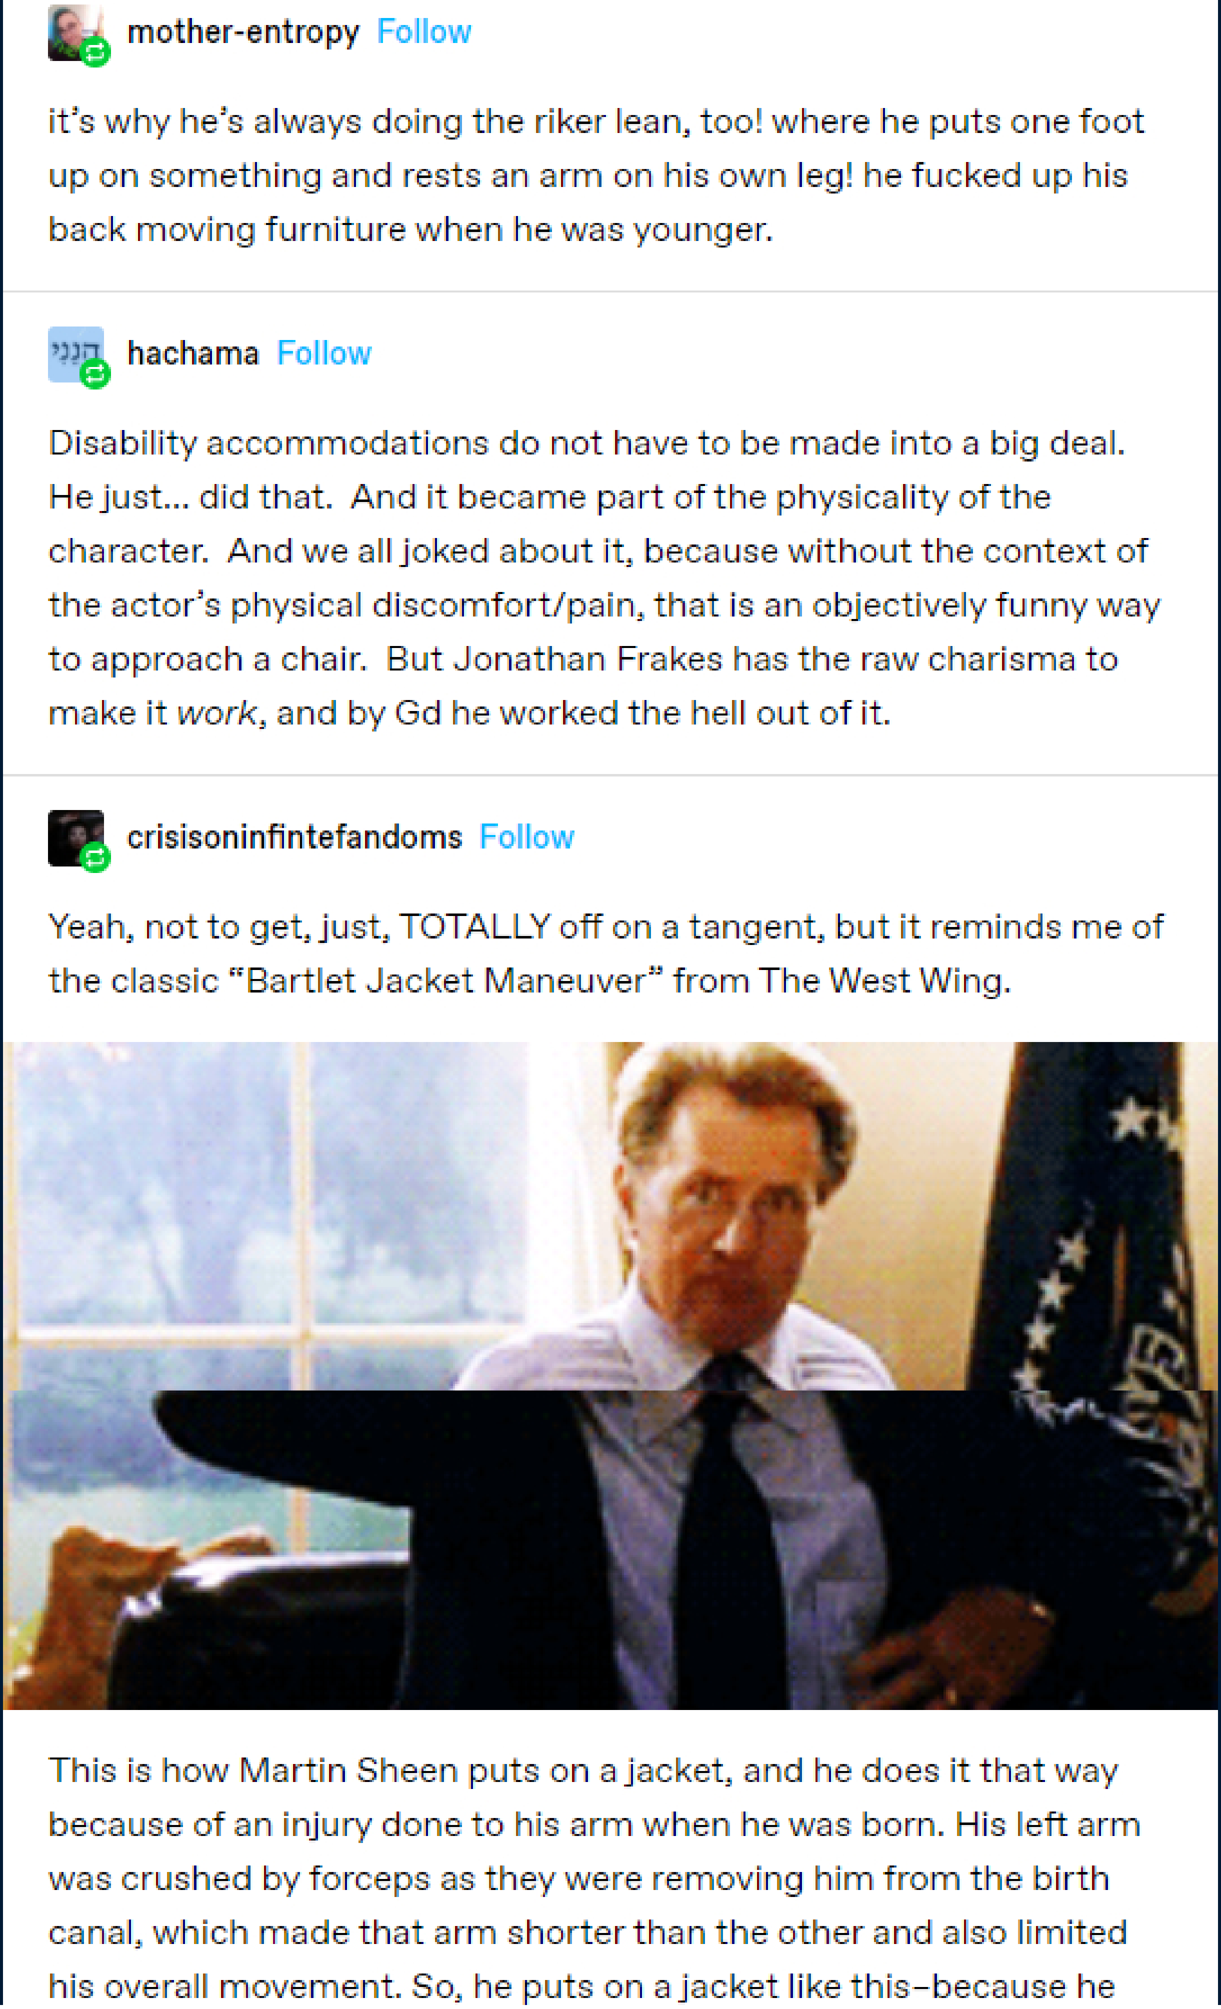
Fascinating! I did not know that!



mother-entropy

it's why he's always doing the riker lean, too! where he puts one foot up on something and rests an arm on his own leg! he fucked up his back moving furniture when he was younger.

hachama

Disability accommodations do not have to be made into a big deal. He just... did that. And it became part of the physicality of the character. And we all joked about it, because without the context of the actor's physical discomfort/pain, that is an objectively funny way to approach a chair. But Jonathan Frakes has the raw charisma to make it work, and by Gd he worked the hell out of it.

crisisoninfintefandoms

Yeah, not to get, just, TOTALLY off on a tangent, but it reminds me of the classic "Bartlet Jacket Maneuver" from The West Wing.

This is how Martin Sheen puts on a jacket, and he does it that way because of an injury done to his arm when he was born. His left arm was crushed by forceps as they were removing him from the birth canal, which made that arm shorter than the other and also limited his overall movement. So, he puts on a jacket like this–because he has to. He just doesn't have the movement and flexibility necessary to slip his arm into the sleeves another way.

But, on the show...he just did it, and did it with such panache and confidence that no one dared even question it. He played President Bartlet on TV for, like, 6 years, and so for 6 years that was just how Fictional President of the United States put his jacket on. And, yeah, it was a bit odd maybe, people definitely noticed, but mostly all anyone actually thought about it was "Damn, that looks cool and badass as fuck."

It became a signature for the character, not in any kind of negative or "that's weird" way, but just, like...something unique and special that people recognized and had really positive associations with. You'd see that jacket flip and it would trigger this little bright smiley "Fuck yeah, you go get'em!" feeling inside.

There's even this bit, in one of the show's most acclaimed episodes, that includes flashbacks to when the character is much younger, and they had the younger actor do this move when he puts on a jacket (which he had to learn how to do of course) and then used it as a transition cut to the present day character finishing the motion–a way of linking them together, making them feel more like one person with one continuing story to the audience. And like, I remember, seeing it when it first aired, and fuck, I got chills, it was just such great moment! They were literally using this little detail, that was entirely due to the actor adapting to his disability, as a way to ground their flashback sequences with the present storyline and make those scenes feel more real and present to the audience and it worked. Because nobody working on the show saw Sheen's funky jacket move as problem, they actually found a way for it to actively make the story better.

Anyway, blah blah blah, characters being interesting and having unique elements informed by their actors doesn't take anything away from the work but actually adds to it, yadda yadda yadda.

I had a dream last night that I lived in a little Baba Yaga house with cat feet. It moved around in the woods very quietly and could climb trees, and when I made a fire inside and the house felt cosy, it would knead the ground contentedly. With the window open you could hear a soft crunchy sound as it clawed at dead leaves, and the motion of pushing in and out with its paws made the house rock gently from side to side and it was putting me to sleep, in my dream.

Anyway, super pissed off at all y'all who've been painting any casual, social relationship between minors and adults as "grooming" or "predatory," as I try to point an 18-year-old on Twitter whose parents are attempting to force them into ABA therapy towards possible sources of help or support, and they say they have....zero safe adults in their life who are older than 18-20.

Folks. Unrelated, decent, older adults are a vital source of support and safety when someone's family and school are unreliable or abusive.

There are different appropriate boundaries for friendships between kids and adults than between kids and other kids, but making kids believe that zero adults in their lives are safe to have as friends is not actually making them safer.

I'm really tired of people on social media saying things like "being silent on an issue means you side with the oppressors" like yes this is true in an abstract sense and is true in a more definite sense if we were all celebrities with large platforms and someone was interviewing us and they asked us about some political issue directly and we said "no comment" but choosing to exist on social media without endlessly discussing every political issue happening throughout the entire world does not mean you stand with oppressors, it means you're just living your life and focusing your energy (mostly offline!!!!!!!) to the few causes and issues most important to you, and that's entirely okay... enough with the fake woke guilt-tripping

tremblinglionheart

Also, and that's true for everyone, whether you're a celebrity or not: if you don't know much about something you don't need to say anything about it (and I believe sometimes things would be better if people kept their mouth shout about things they know nothing about) about).

Like, if I know nothing about a subject I won't say anything about it just because someone tells me X is evil/wrong. And one or two links to sources don't change that. As a friend of mine once said "You can find sources and proof for everything if you really want to, that doesn't make it true". And that's especially true for the internet.

I'm not saying people necessarily lie, but noone is immune to propaganda. And if it's a topic you know nothing about, how would you know if that expert is actually an expert, or that source a trusted source? Especially when it comes to stuff in other countries where you don't know the language and have to rely on translations and the few information that are available in your language.

And forcing people to make a statement (because that's exactly what it is, forcing others) on something they might know nothing about is just terrible. And that goes for small blogs, influencers, celebrities and just everyone. Especially since a lot of things aren't as black and white as it likes to be portrait. Especially in political situations there often are a lot of mistakes made on both sides and on both sides innocent people have to suffer.

Forcing people to make a statement often causes more harm than good. Not only to the people themself but also to the cause. It just festers resentment on both sides and helps false information to spread which just complicates things even more.

And yes, I agree that people should educate themself on these things. But many don't have the energy to educate themself on everything. Or the lack of ressources. Because as I said before, sometimes there are language barriers, different cultural backgrounds and stuff like that, that make inderstanding difficult.

So just because someone doesn't say something about a topic it doesn't mean they side with the abuser or opressor. It might just mean they don't know enough about the thing and don't have the energy, ability or ressources to inform themself.

And no, a statement from someone who was there isn't necessarily enough information. Because they might only know part of the truth, they might just be an innocent person caught up in a much bigger much more complicated conflict or they might be ommitting information that would change the story completely.

Lisa who goes by the name @ostdrossel on Instagram has always been fascinated by nature and different bird types. So she came up with a brilliant idea: she uses a bird feeder cam, which consists of a camera box, a macro lens, and an attachable bird feeding platform. The camera is tiny and equipped with a motion sensor so that when a bird comes to eat, it photographs birds a non-intrusive way.

My sociology professor had a really good metaphor for privilege today. She didn't talk about race or gender or orientation or class, she talked about being left-handed.

A left-handed person walks into most classrooms and immediately is made aware of their left-handedness - they have to sit in a left-handed seat, which restricts their choices of where to sit. If there are not enough left-handed seats, they will have to sit in a right-handed seat and be continuously aware of their left-handedness. (There are other examples like left-handed scissors or baseball mitts as well.)

Meanwhile, right-handed people have much more choice about where to sit, and almost never have to think about their right-handedness.

Does this mean right-handed people are bad? No.

Does it mean that we should replace all right-handed desks with left-handed desks? No.

But could we maybe use different desk styles that can accommodate everyone and makes it so nobody has limited options or constant awareness that they are different? Yes.

Now think of this as a metaphor. For social class. For race. For ethnicity. For gender. For orientation. For anything else that sets us apart.

craving romance as an aro

we hear a lot about the 'never understood the appeal of romance' type of aromanticism, but what about the other side? the aros who always loved the idea of romance, the symbols, everything. the aros who dated many people, looking for that spark that they see in movies and fanfiction and poetry, but just never felt it, and were left discouraged. the ones who still look within themselves for any sign of romantic attraction any time that they meet someone new, and feel guilty for falling victim to amatonormativity. the bitterness that can creep in when friends get together, feeling envy in knowing that that feeling isn't possible for them.

for me, this experience is exactly why I am so thankful for the aromantic community. surrounding myself with stories of qprs, non partnered aro people, etc, who are happy and able to make a live that isn't lacking anything, helps me to slowly but surely unlearn that ideal that I idolized for so long.

Been thinking about how I would do BBC Merlin differently and honestly, I think Gaius should have died at the beginning of series 4, not Lancelot.

Series 4 really should have been the season for the changing of the old guard, not just for Arthur but Merlin as well. Uther and Gaius have been constant forces in these two young men's lives series 1-3, arguably to the detriment of Merlin's and Arthur's shared destiny. During that time, they've reinforced that fear and self-preservation should be Merlin's and Arthur's sole motivators, that great change isn't worth the risk.

Gaius knows what Uther is doing is wrong, but he rarely takes any action to stop the king's carnage unless Merlin insists that they intervene or Merlin's own life is on the line. As Kilgharrah states as early as 1×06 Gaius, often turns "a blind eye," "struggle[s] against (Merlin's) destiny" and his main characteristics, besides his wisdom and wit, are that he is cowardly and unchanging. This not only impedes Merlin's progress, but it makes Gaius' role as a character mostly useless in terms of servicing the plot, especially once Merlin becomes more and more knowledgeable about magic; he has an easy mastery of his abilities by series 4. Beyond filling in as the father Merlin never got to have (RIP Balinor), Gaius doesn't do much.

Arthur and Merlin losing the most important elders in their lives around the same time would have been an excellent parallel that would have reinforced that coin metaphor, and their shared grief would have brought them closer together than ever. It would have also expanded a lot of story opportunities for Merlin (for instance, does he have to give up being Arthur's servant to become the Court Physician, or does a new character take on the role?)

In argument of Lancelot staying alive: Lancelot, on the other hand, perfectly represents the radical change Camelot needs to see. He's a knight who didn't come from a royal family, and he accepts magic wholeheartedly from his first encounter with it. He knows that magic can be both a force for good and evil; he implicitly understands that its users have nuance, just like all warriors. His perspective as a non-magic user and a trusted friend of Arthur's would have been invaluable to Arthur accepting Merlin's magic and, more importantly, the potential for magic to be used as a force of good.

There's a number of fascinating dynamics you could have established between Lancelot and the rest of the Knights as well, not just his relationships with Arthur, Merlin and Guinevere. It also cuts out the possibility of 4×09 happening, which in my book, is only a good thing considering how shoddily Lancelot's resurrection was handled.

This isn't to say that Gaius was necessarily a bad person, but there's no arguing his advice led to a score of Merlin's terrible decisions, when if Merlin had trusted his gut instinct, things probably would have turned out at least a little better for him.

Tldr: If we wanted to see Arthur and Merlin grow into their destiny together, they both had to lose their problematic mentors who were keeping them rooted in the past.

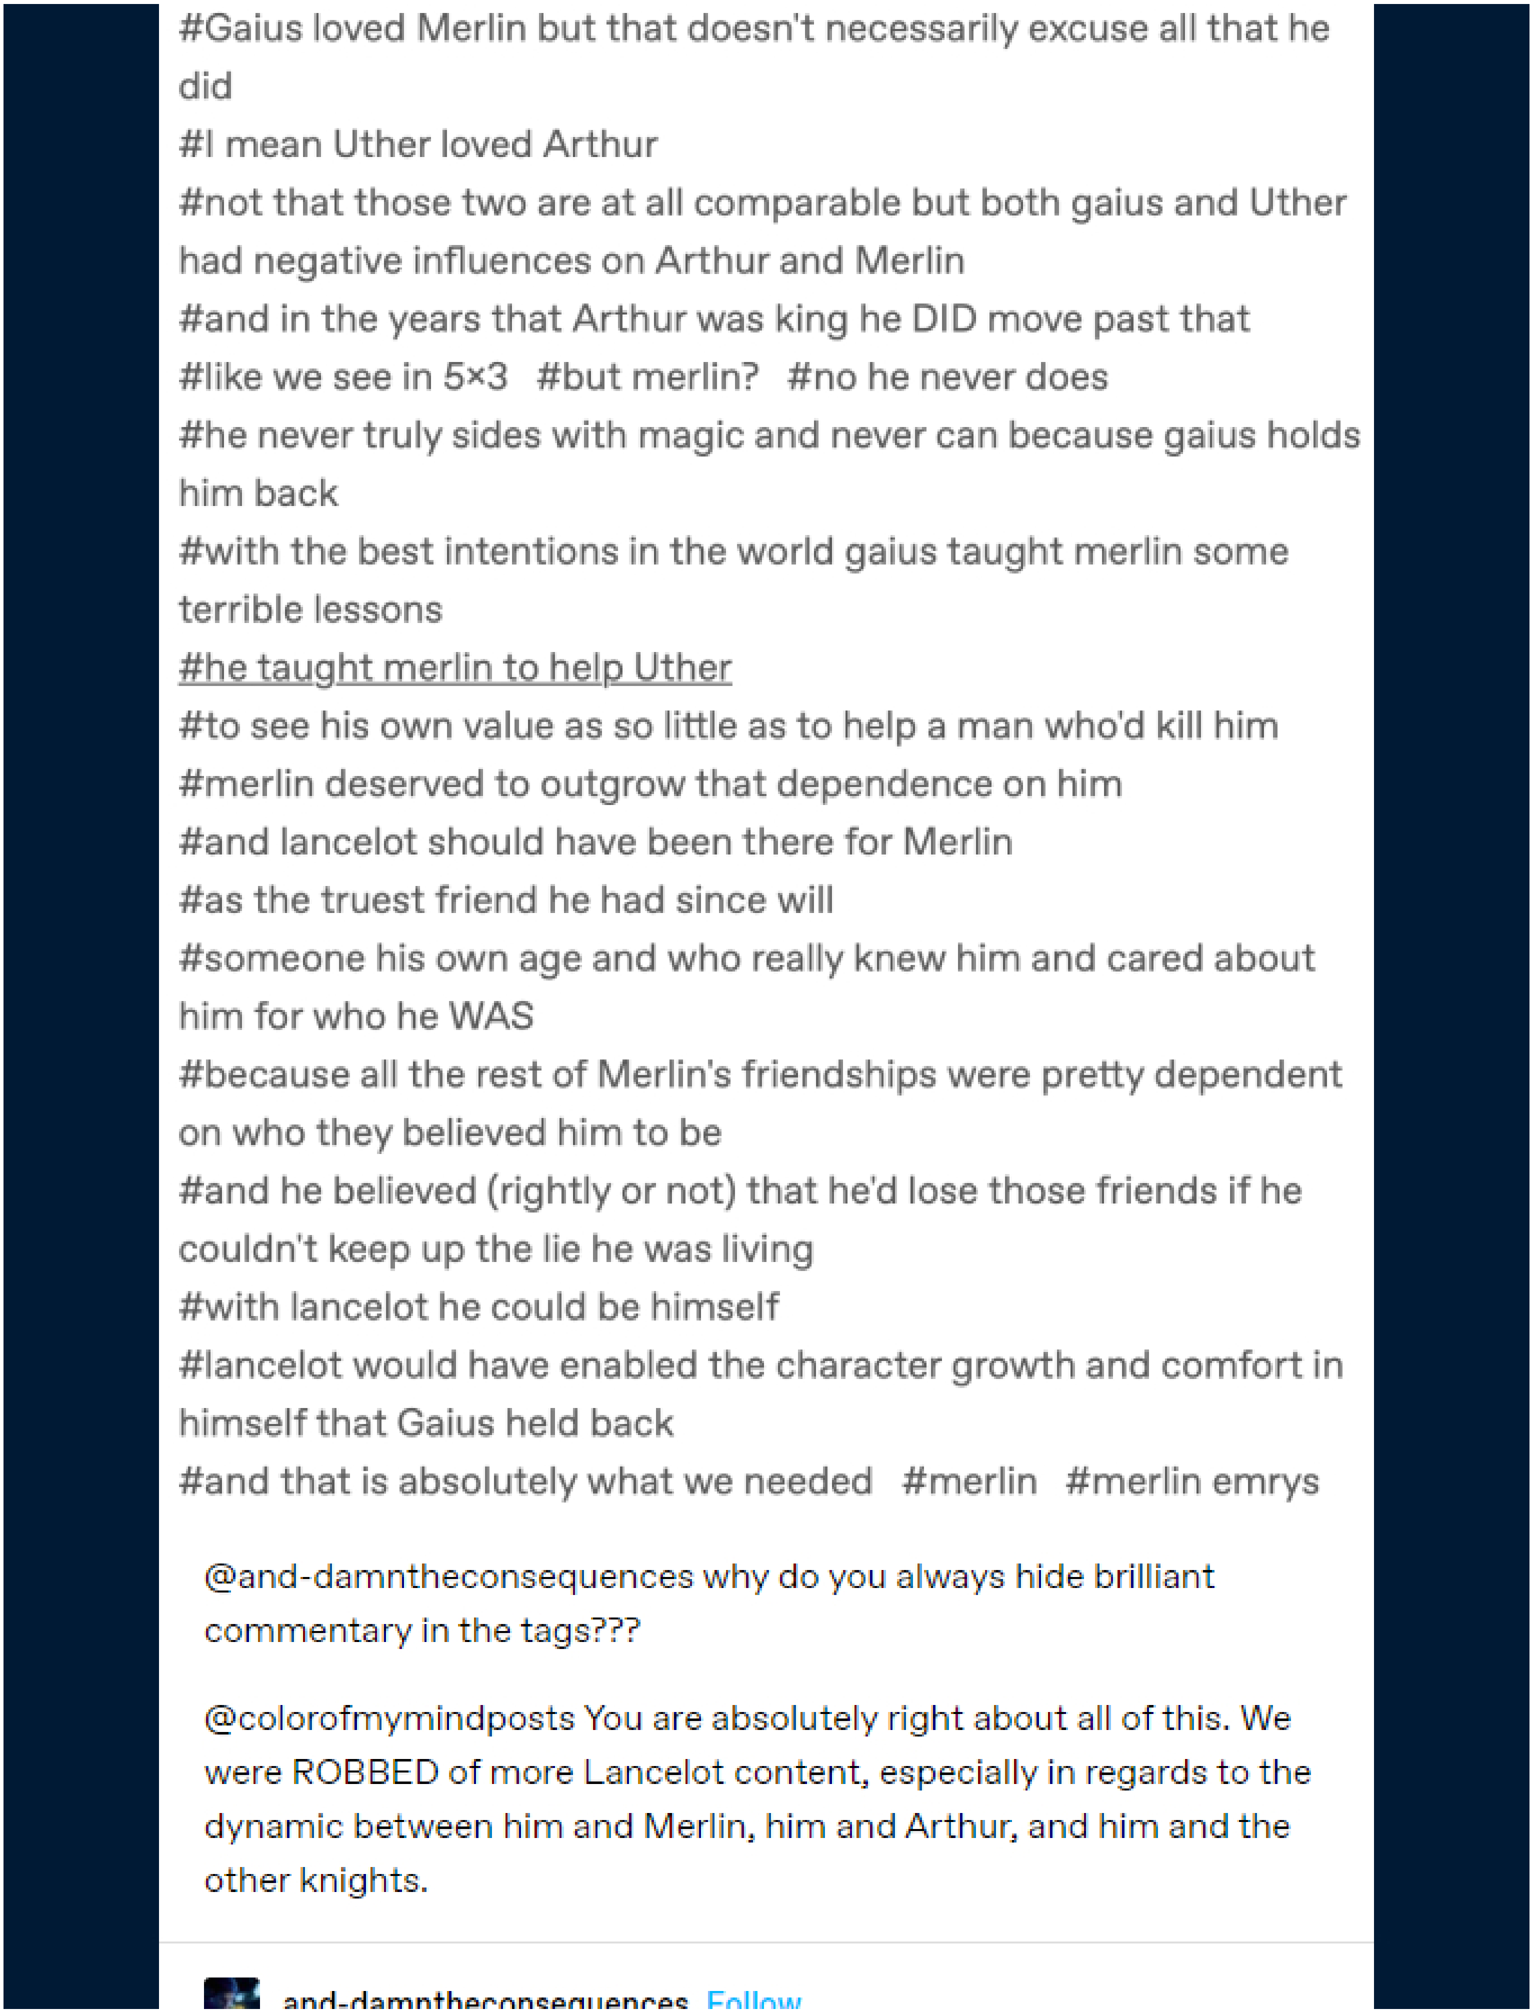
#THIS!!!



#Gaius loved Merlin but that doesn't necessarily excuse all that he did
#I mean Uther loved Arthur
#not that those two are at all comparable but both gaius and Uther had negative influences on Arthur and Merlin #and in the years that Arthur was king he DID move past that #like we see in 5×3 #but merlin? #no he never does #he never truly sides with magic and never can because gaius holds him back #with the best intentions in the world gaius taught merlin some terrible lessons
#he taught merlin to help Uther
#to see his own value as so little as to help a man who'd kill him
#merlin deserved to outgrow that dependence on him
#and lancelot should have been there for Merlin
#as the truest friend he had since will #someone his own age and who really knew him and cared about him for who he WAS #because all the rest of Merlin's friendships were pretty dependent on who they believed him to be #and he believed (rightly or not) that he'd lose those friends if he couldn't keep up the lie he was living #with lancelot he could be himself
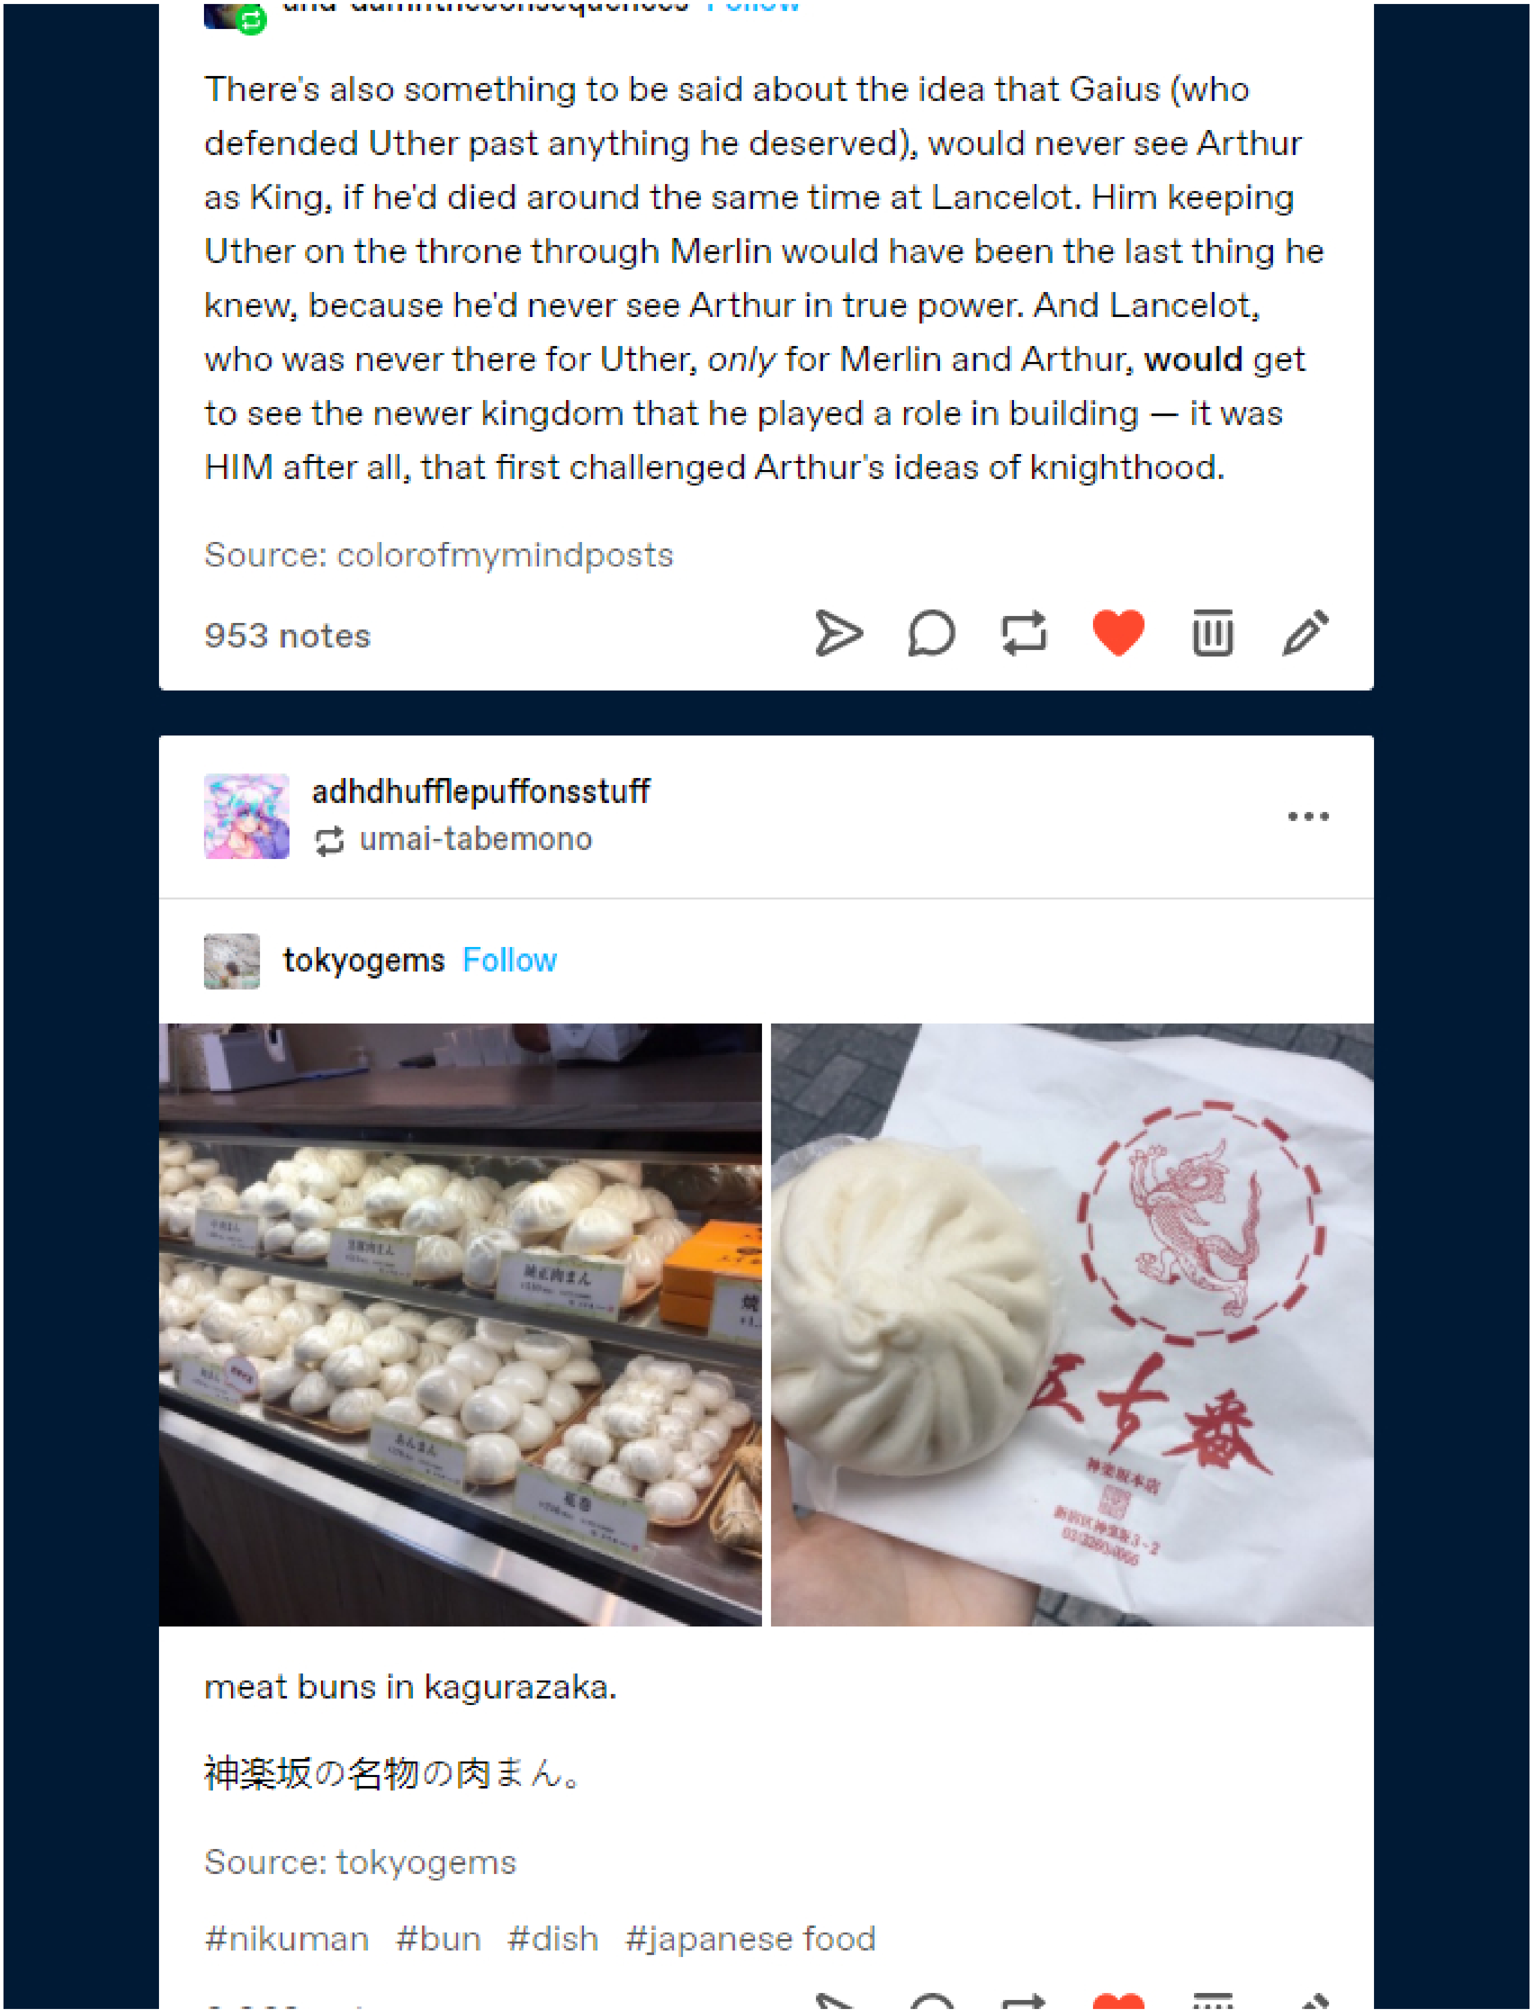
#lancelot would have enabled the character growth and comfort in himself that Gaius held back
#and that is absolutely what we needed #merlin #merlin emrys

@and-damntheconsequences why do you always hide brilliant commentary in the tags???

@colorofmymindposts You are absolutely right about all of this. We were ROBBED of more Lancelot content, especially in regards to the dynamic between him and Merlin, him and Arthur, and him and the other knights.

and-damntheconsequences Follow



There's also something to be said about the idea that Gaius (who defended Uther past anything he deserved), would never see Arthur as King, if he'd died around the same time at Lancelot. Him keeping Uther on the throne through Merlin would have been the last thing he knew, because he'd never see Arthur in true power. And Lancelot, who was never there for Uther, only for Merlin and Arthur, would get to see the newer kingdom that he played a role in building — it was HIM after all, that first challenged Arthur's ideas of knighthood.

> "A TERF is a white supremacist whose gateway to white supremacy is anti-trans bigotry, instead of anti-Semitism or anti-Blackness or anti-migration or misogyny. As with any gateway, many people engaging in this ideology may not be aware of their proximity to white supremacy. This is the standard radicalization pathway that we have seen over and over and over with, for example, anti-Islamic sentiment. Personally, [I] find it is most comparable to how anti-Semitism gateways are used. Often, we see white supremacists exploiting legitimate grievances with the financial systems by turning into an anti-Semitic issue. White supremacists take legitimately frustrated and class-oppressed > people's anger at banks, and carefully plant the seeds of anti-Semitism. They'll point out the irrefutable fact that there exist Jewish people in executive positions in banking and vilely twist this. TERFs take a legitimate grievance: patriarchal oppression of women and homophobia and turn it into a movement based on systematic exclusion of a specific class of people. This is the redpill. [We] need to stop the good-faith engagements with their ideology and start treating it like the gateway to white supremacy that it is."

iheardducksaregoingquackers Follow

it never would have occurred to me that transphobia has roots in racism or that TERFs are a gateway into white supremacy.

information like this is vital.

jenniferrpovey Follow

It's inherently racist because it assumes all cultures follow the western concept of the absolute gender binary rooted in what genitals you have.

nonbinary-hawke

It's also racist because it defines womanhood using conventionally attractive white women as the baseline.

Women who have facial hair, have thick or "excessive" body hair, have broad shoulders, have "masculine" facial features like angular jaws, have deep voices, are taller than "average", have receding hairlines, are muscular, etc are immediately assumed to be men because they don't fit white European ideals of womanhood. And these standards do affect white women of course, whether they're cis or trans, but they mostly target Black and brown women.

There's a reason why Black women, particularly athletes, are the ones who get targeted with so many accusations of being men. Why they're expected to undergo hormone testing. Why they're accused of having "excessive" testosterone. Why they're expected to undergo physical examinations to "prove" that they're "real" women.

Radical feminism, trans inclusive or not, is based around biological essentialist white supremacy whether radfems want to admit it or not.

Why would the Pentagon fund a movie?

Literally most summer blockbusters are straight-up financed by the Pentagon. The Pentagon provides funding for movies but in exchange they demand to be allowed to make any edits they want to the script to ensure the U.S. military is depicted in a positive light and the movie can be used as tools for miltiary recruitment. It's called the Military Entertainment Complex (and it also involves the Pentagon funding videogames and music videos)

Basically, if a movie made in the U.S. contains ANY depction of the U.S. military, you can be 99% sure that it's at least partially a propagada piece commissioned by the Pentagon.

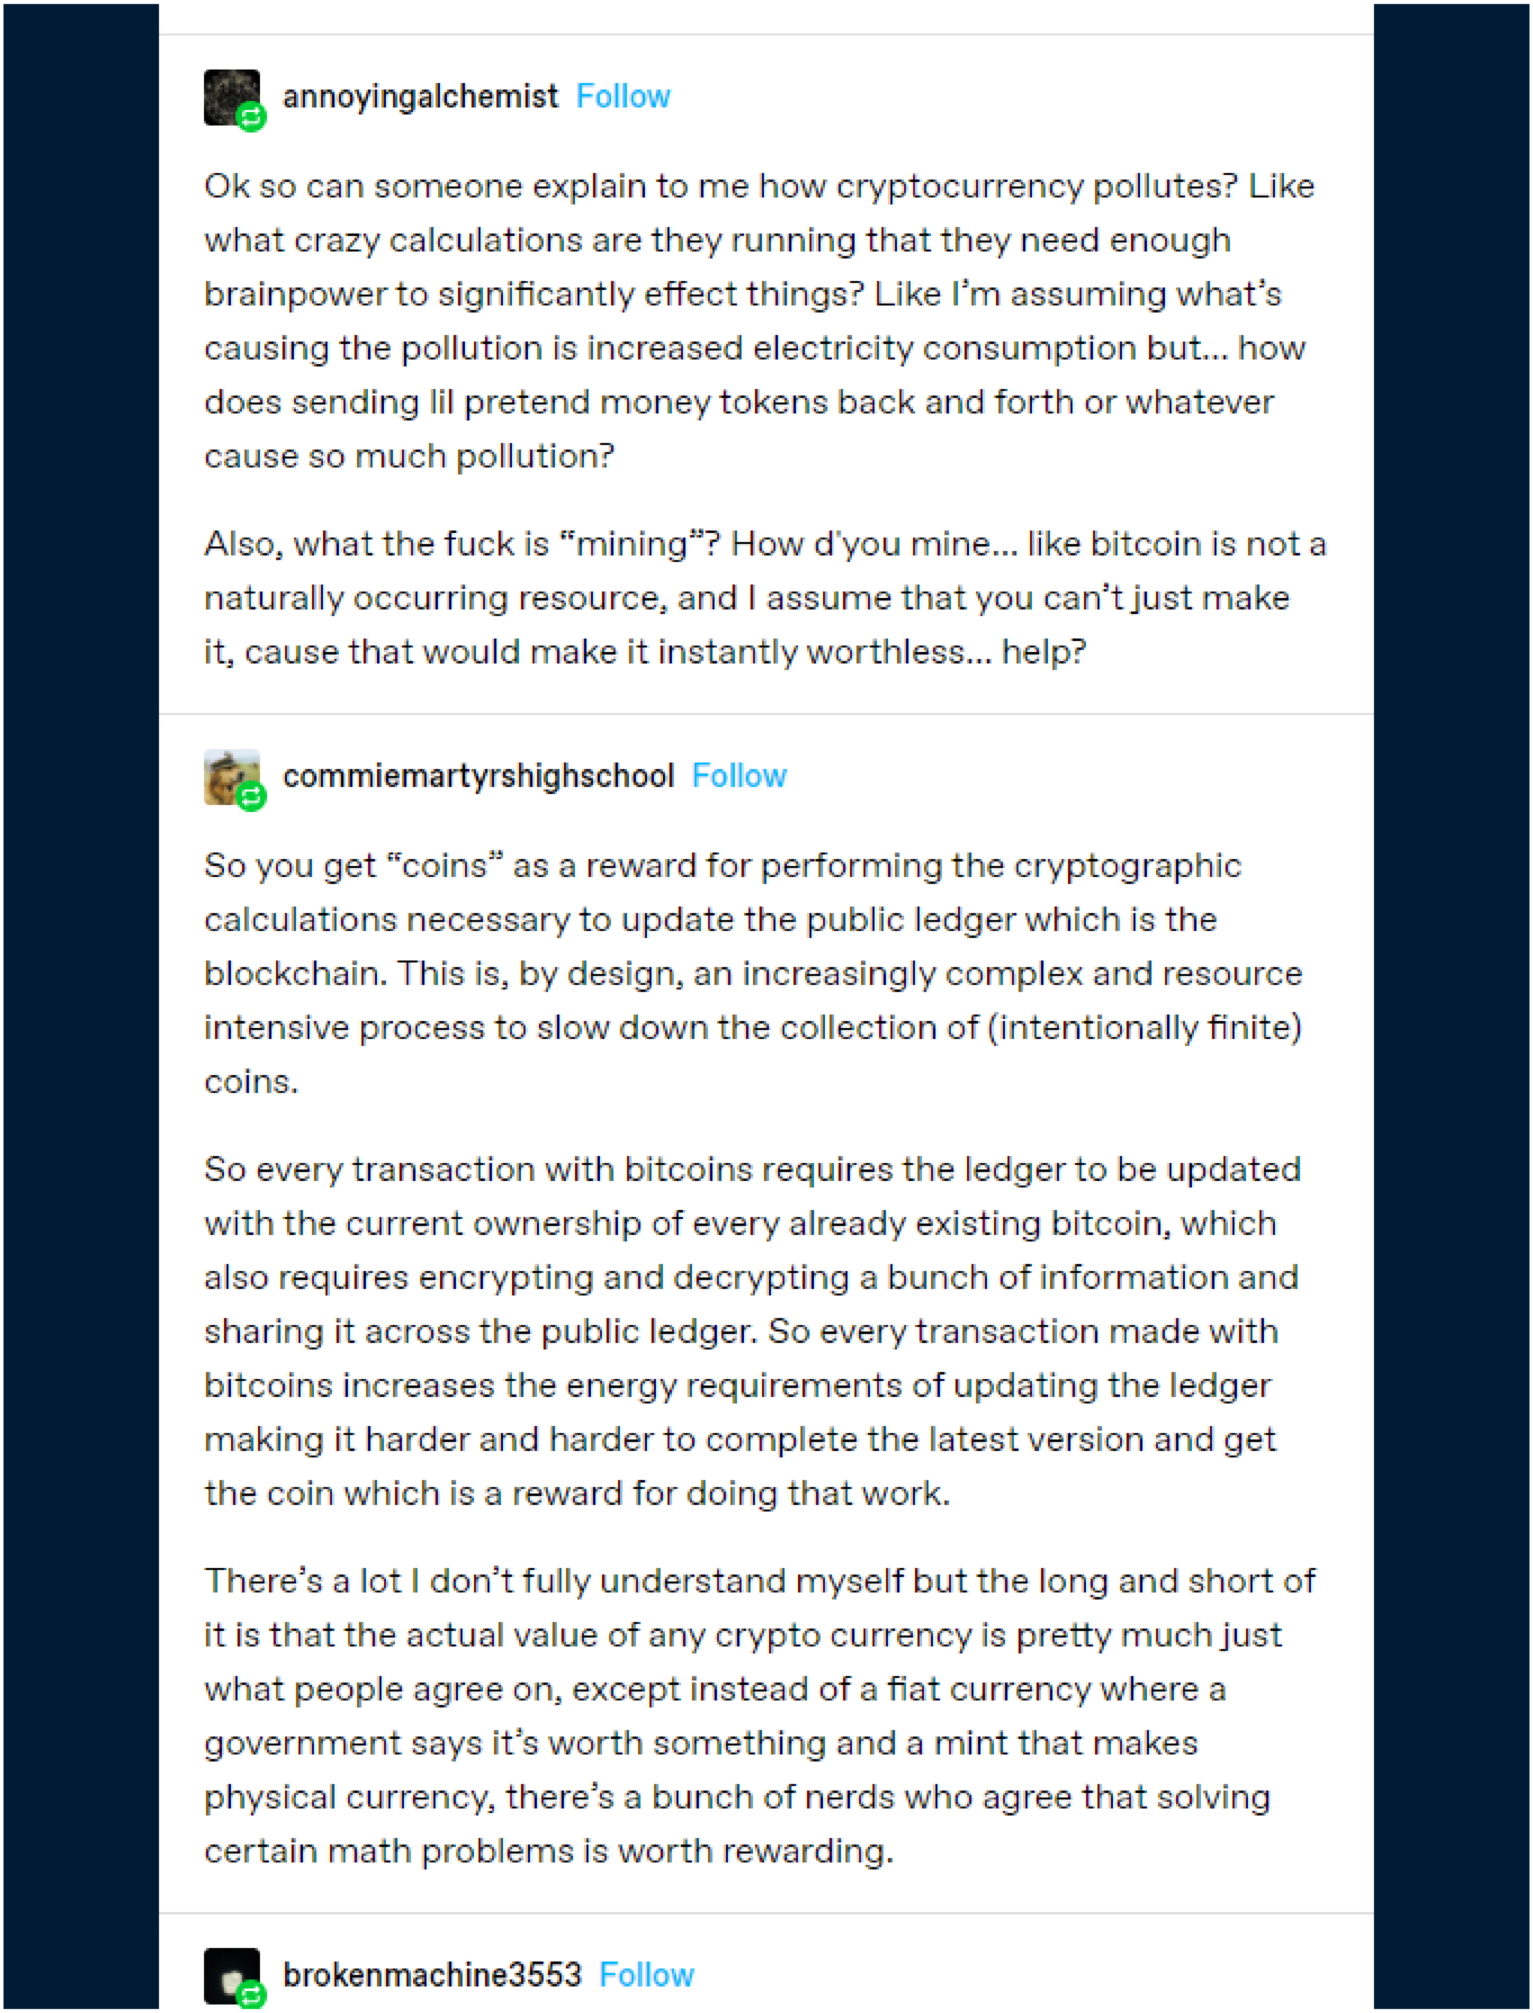
Cryptocurrency is literally like an eight-year-old's concept of an evil businessman. He just plugs his pollution machine in and gets money for it. It doesn't make anything, it just. Pollutes. And makes money. Like a fucking Captain Planet villain

1:15 AM · 25 Apr 21 · Twitter for Android



annoyingalchemist

Ok so can someone explain to me how cryptocurrency pollutes? Like what crazy calculations are they running that they need enough brainpower to significantly effect things? Like I'm assuming what's causing the pollution is increased electricity consumption but… how does sending lil pretend money tokens back and forth or whatever cause so much pollution?

Also, what the fuck is "mining"? How d'you mine… like bitcoin is not a naturally occurring resource, and I assume that you can't just make it, cause that would make it instantly worthless… help?

So you get "coins" as a reward for performing the cryptographic calculations necessary to update the public ledger which is the blockchain. This is, by design, an increasingly complex and resource intensive process to slow down the collection of (intentionally finite) coins.

So every transaction with bitcoins requires the ledger to be updated with the current ownership of every already existing bitcoin, which also requires encrypting and decrypting a bunch of information and sharing it across the public ledger. So every transaction made with bitcoins increases the energy requirements of updating the ledger making it harder and harder to complete the latest version and get the coin which is a reward for doing that work.

There's a lot I don't fully understand myself but the long and short of it is that the actual value of any crypto currency is pretty much just what people agree on, except instead of a fiat currency where a government says it's worth something and a mint that makes physical currency, there's a bunch of nerds who agree that solving certain math problems is worth rewarding.

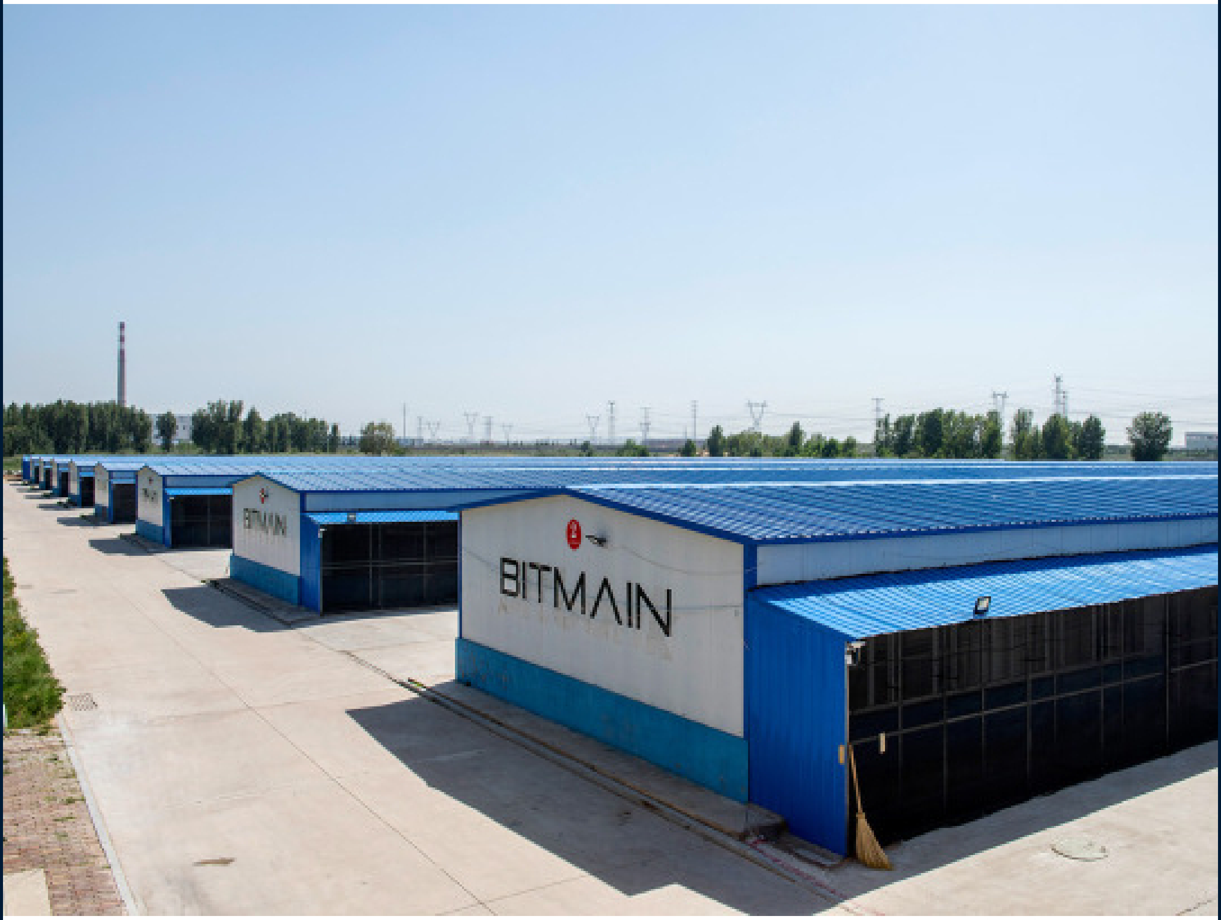
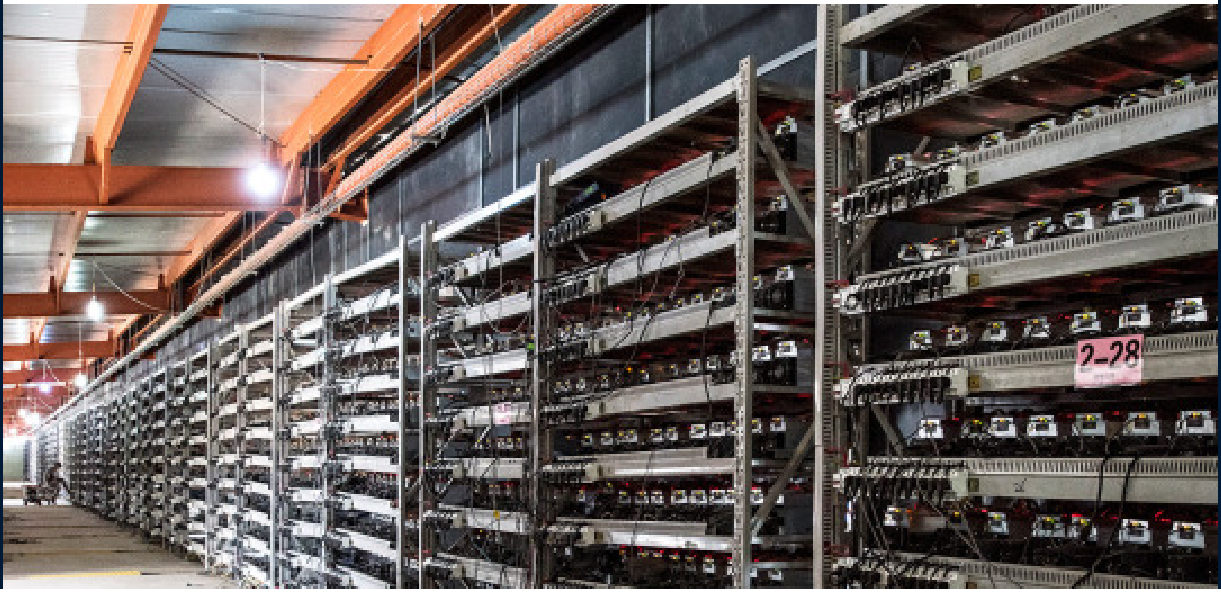
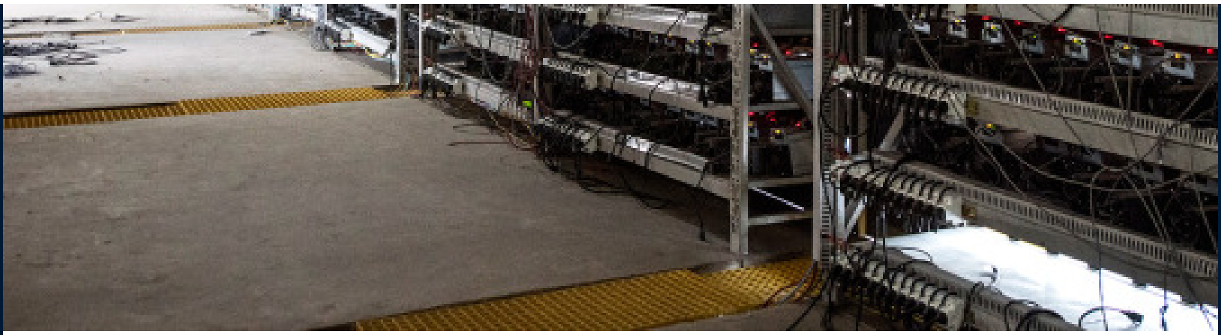
Feeling like adding on for a bit of context, I know it's kind of hard to understand how mining for really any kind of crypto is hard to imagine, but seeing what a bitcoin mining facility looks like for the first time really helped me realize just how energy intensive it is.



See all these warehouses? They're quite literally filled to the brim with specialized computers that do nothing but mine, each one filled with thousands of these computers, just row after row of this:





So all the power consumption winds up adding up like crazy.

white-throated-packrat Follow

Yep, that's why cryptocurrency and NFTs are considered major contributors to pollution – because the energy needs of all those computers doing the calculation are equivalent to a medium sized country. Currently, crypto consumes more energy than Argentina.

ralfmaximus Follow

Guess what's inside a lot of mining rigs? Gowan, guess.

RTX 2080
NVIDIA

Graphics cards!

Lots and lots of these puppies side by side, spinning their little fans as fast as they can go because as it turns out: GPUs are perfect for doing the calculations required for mining cryptocurrency.

Which means amateur miners buy a lot of these things.

So many, in fact, that there is now (May 2021) a world-wide shortage of NVIDIA and AMD graphics cards and building a new gaming rig is damn near impossible because of the shortage.

OR you can pay a ridiculously inflated price by GPU scalpers on eBay.

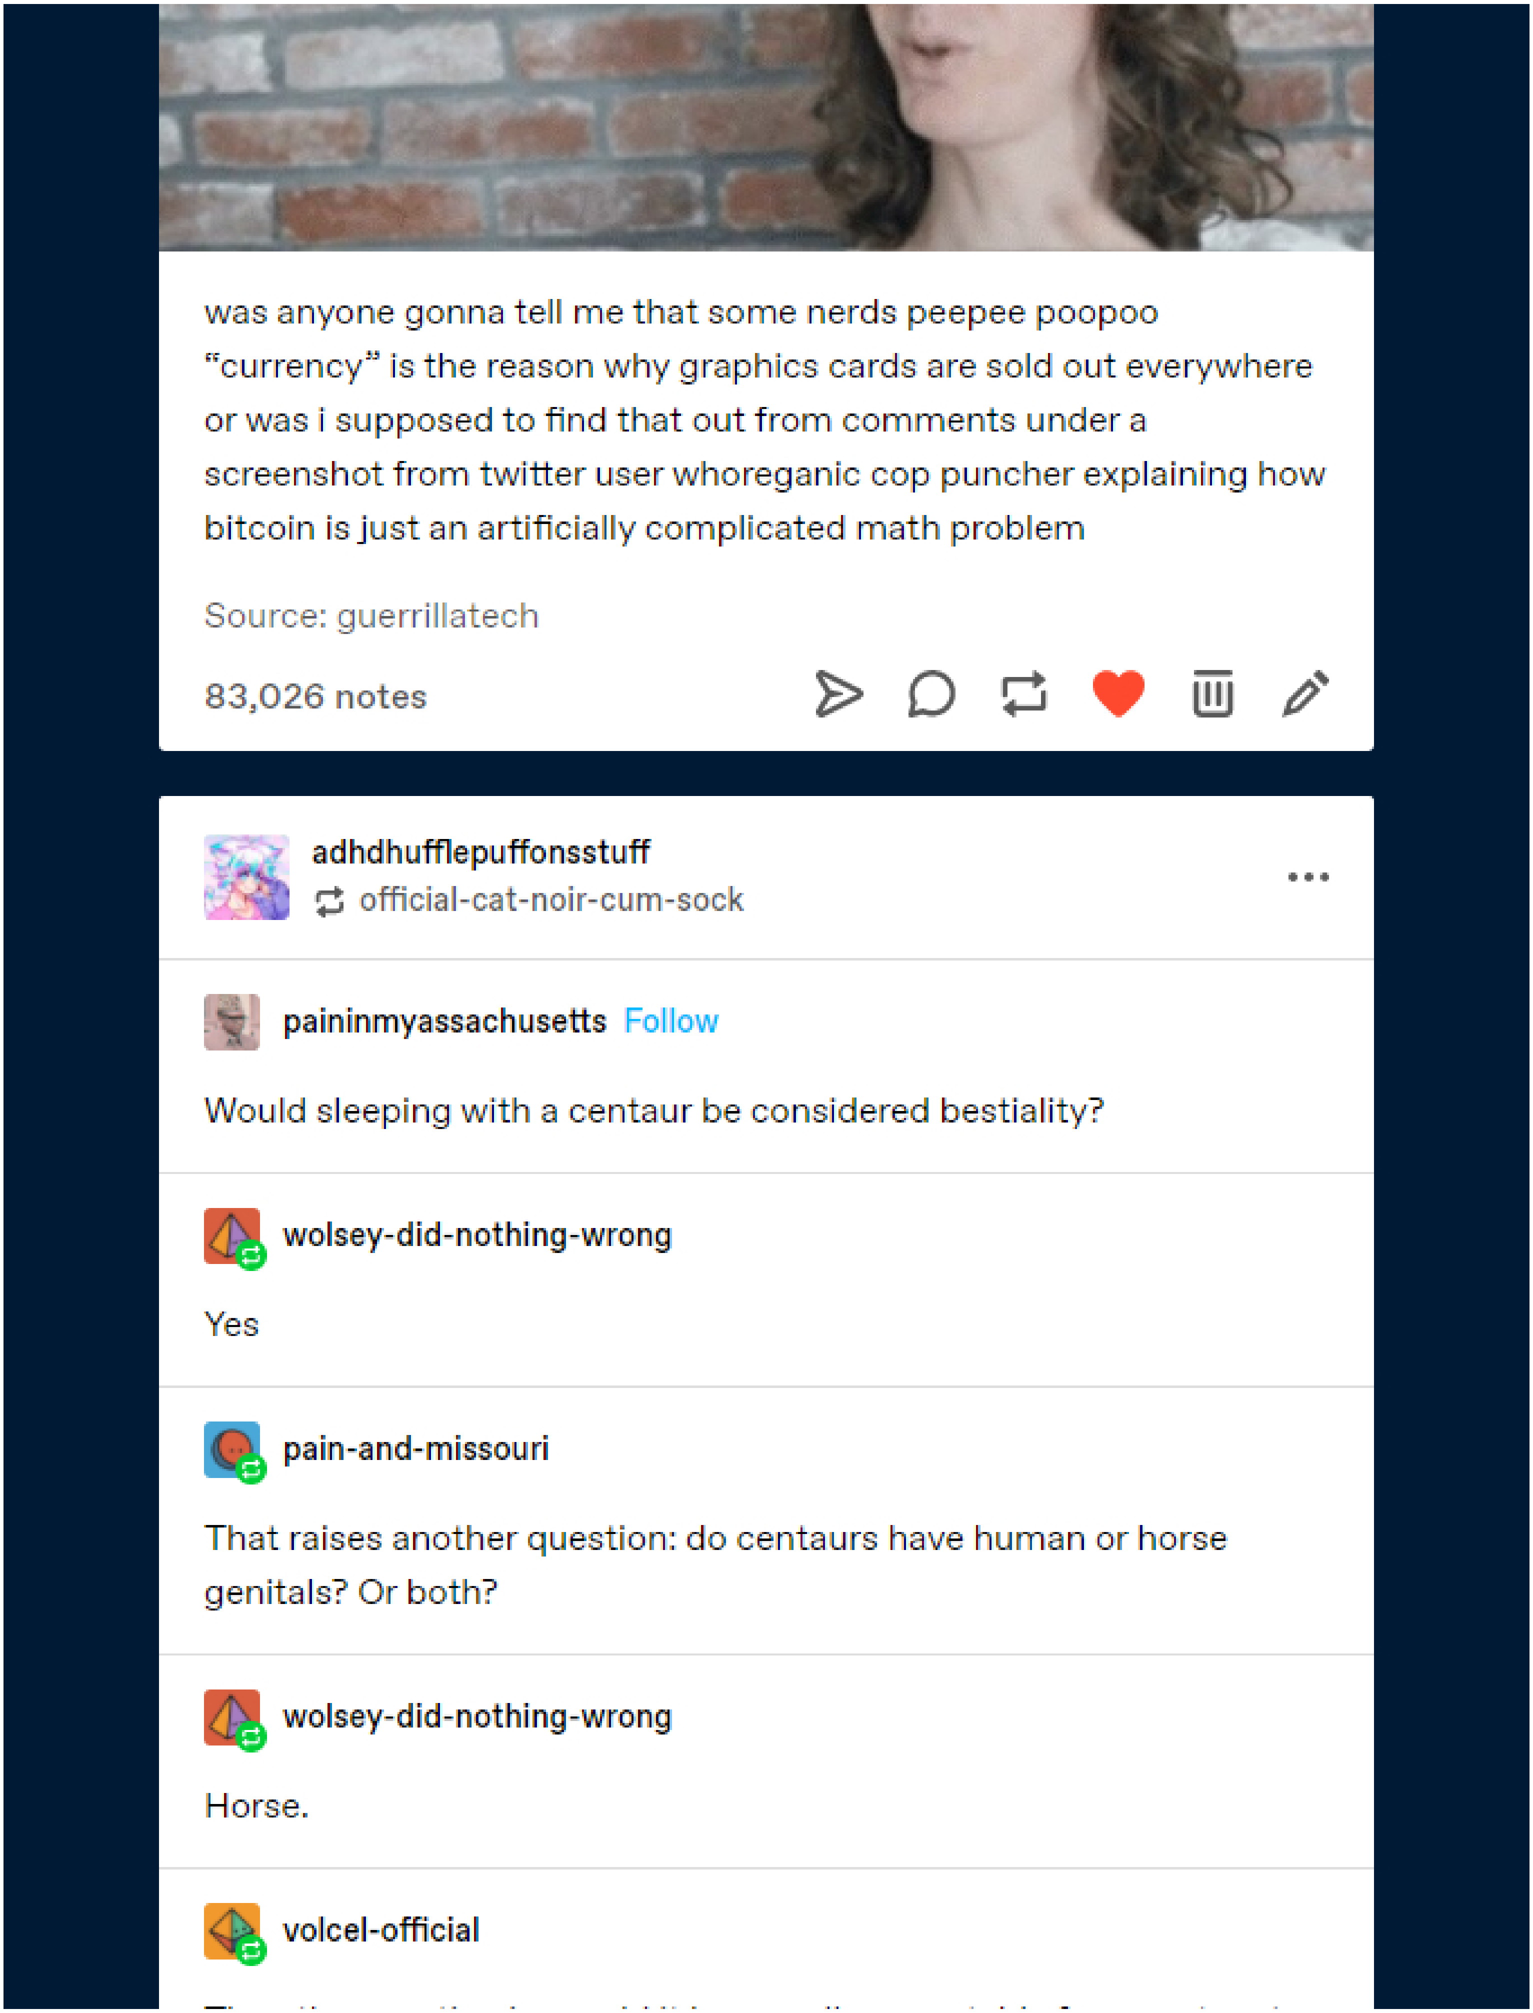
Seriously. Places that sell GPUs impose quantity limits because if they don't… some crypto asshole will buy out their entire stock in one go.

But the "good" news is that the professional miners (like the Bitmain site up there, in the photos) use dedicated ASIC mining rigs which don't use consumer GPUs. But (bad news) they DO use the same sort of chips that NVIDIA & AMD rely on to make their products, which just starves the supply pipeline at a different point.

Bottom line: not only does cryptocurrency mining consume terawatts of electricity, it also consumes megatons of computer hardware. Which is expensive to produce (in resource terms, like rare metals, petroleum, water, electricity, paper) and will, someday, require even MORE resources to recycle. Or else it ends up in a landfill.

Note that current dedicated mining rigs are so highly specialized they are useless for anything other than mining. They cannot be easily repurposed to (say) sequence DNA or fold proteins for miracle cures.

What a waste.



was anyone gonna tell me that some nerds peepee poopoo "currency" is the reason why graphics cards are sold out everywhere or was i supposed to find that out from comments under a screenshot from twitter user whoreganic cop puncher explaining how bitcoin is just an artificially complicated math problem elvish-sky asked:

i am from Massachusetts!!

gossip-girl-of-middle-earth answered:

Hey, hey!! The closest state I've been to around Massachusetts (fuck that's a tough one to spell, lordy) is probably New York!

Your scenery up there is absolutely gorgeous

ARGHHH I WANNA GO BACK!!

But also, every time I think of someone actually in America, I get weirded out. Granted I've been there a few times, but to think people actually live there without free healthcare and university tuition…? It weirds me out so much, because you Americans to the rest of the world are like tigers—something you know about from media and zoos, but can't possibly imagine actually existing irl

This isn't meant as an insult btw, America is just so famous it's bizarre to think normal life happens there every day

elvish-sky

Lmao that could totally be an insult and i wouldn't be offended at all, America really sucks sometimes.

and yeah, it's usually very pretty up here, especially in the fall! (it's raining buckets right now, so not so much) Massachusetts is the worst thing to spell ever, so I never do, autocorrect is a lifesaver 😂 and New York, you say? please don't tell me you went to a Yankees game. but other than the Yankees, NY is nice!

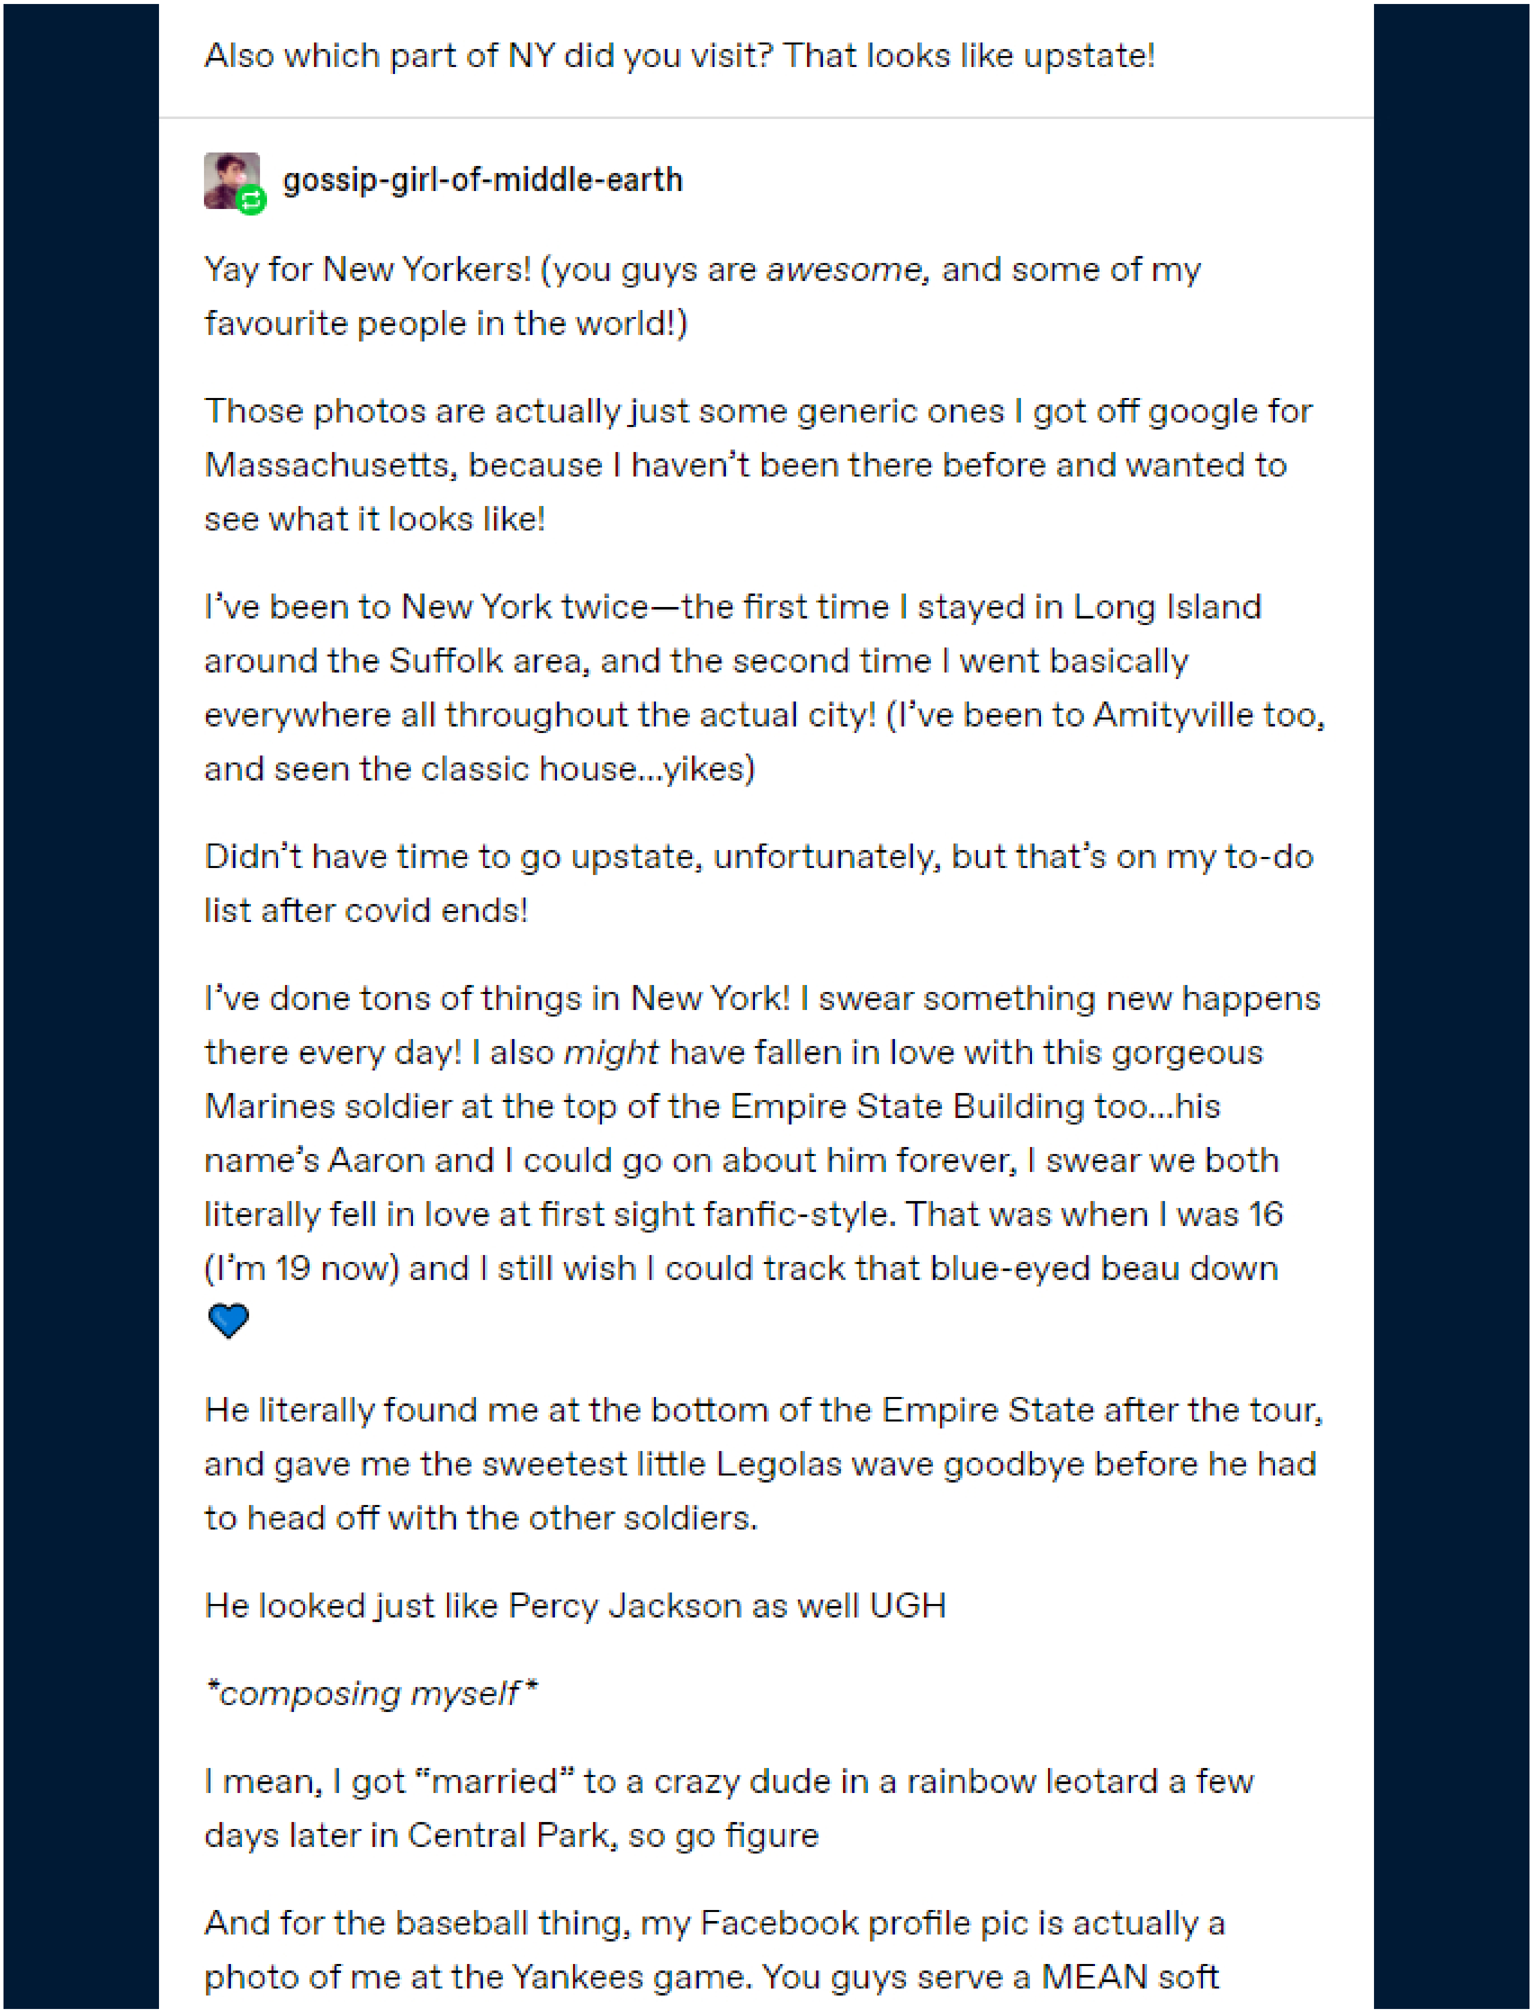
Popping in to say that I am proud you went to a Yankees game!

Yankees rule, Boston drools!!

(Sorry not sorry, very proud New Yorker here haha)



Also which part of NY did you visit? That looks like upstate!

gossip-girl-of-middle-earth

Yay for New Yorkers! (you guys are awesome, and some of my favourite people in the world!)

Those photos are actually just some generic ones I got off google for Massachusetts, because I haven't been there before and wanted to see what it looks like!

I've been to New York twice—the first time I stayed in Long Island around the Suffolk area, and the second time I went basically everywhere all throughout the actual city! (I've been to Amityville too, and seen the classic house…yikes)

Didn't have time to go upstate, unfortunately, but that's on my to-do list after covid ends!

I've done tons of things in New York! I swear something new happens there every day! I also might have fallen in love with this gorgeous Marines soldier at the top of the Empire State Building too…his name's Aaron and I could go on about him forever, I swear we both literally fell in love at first sight fanfic-style. That was when I was 16 (I'm 19 now) and I still wish I could track that blue-eyed beau down 💙

He literally found me at the bottom of the Empire State after the tour, and gave me the sweetest little Legolas wave goodbye before he had to head off with the other soldiers.

He looked just like Percy Jackson as well UGH

composing myself

I mean, I got "married" to a crazy dude in a rainbow leotard a few days later in Central Park, so go figure

And for the baseball thing, my Facebook profile pic is actually a photo of me at the Yankees game. You guys serve a MEAN soft pretzel—we don't have anything like them in Australia, and I'm seriously craving one! Especially with the mustard 😋

These are just the last three fics I wrote. I appreciate the likes, believe me I do, but you have to understand. Likes do nothing for content creators. It's the reblogs. Because that's how you find shit on your dashboard. Through reblogs. Not likes. This isn't twitter or tiktok or instagram. This is a website that's run by the reblog system.

Reblogging helps content creators put their stuff out there. Why do you think so many people stopped writing fanfic and creating beautiful fanart and edits? It's because they put in hours of work and don't get nearly enough notes for their masterpieces. Yes we do this because we enjoy it but like...some validation won't hurt. A boost of confidence here and there might be all someone needs to finish whatever thing they started and left.

Anyway, I'm still going to reblog my shit...

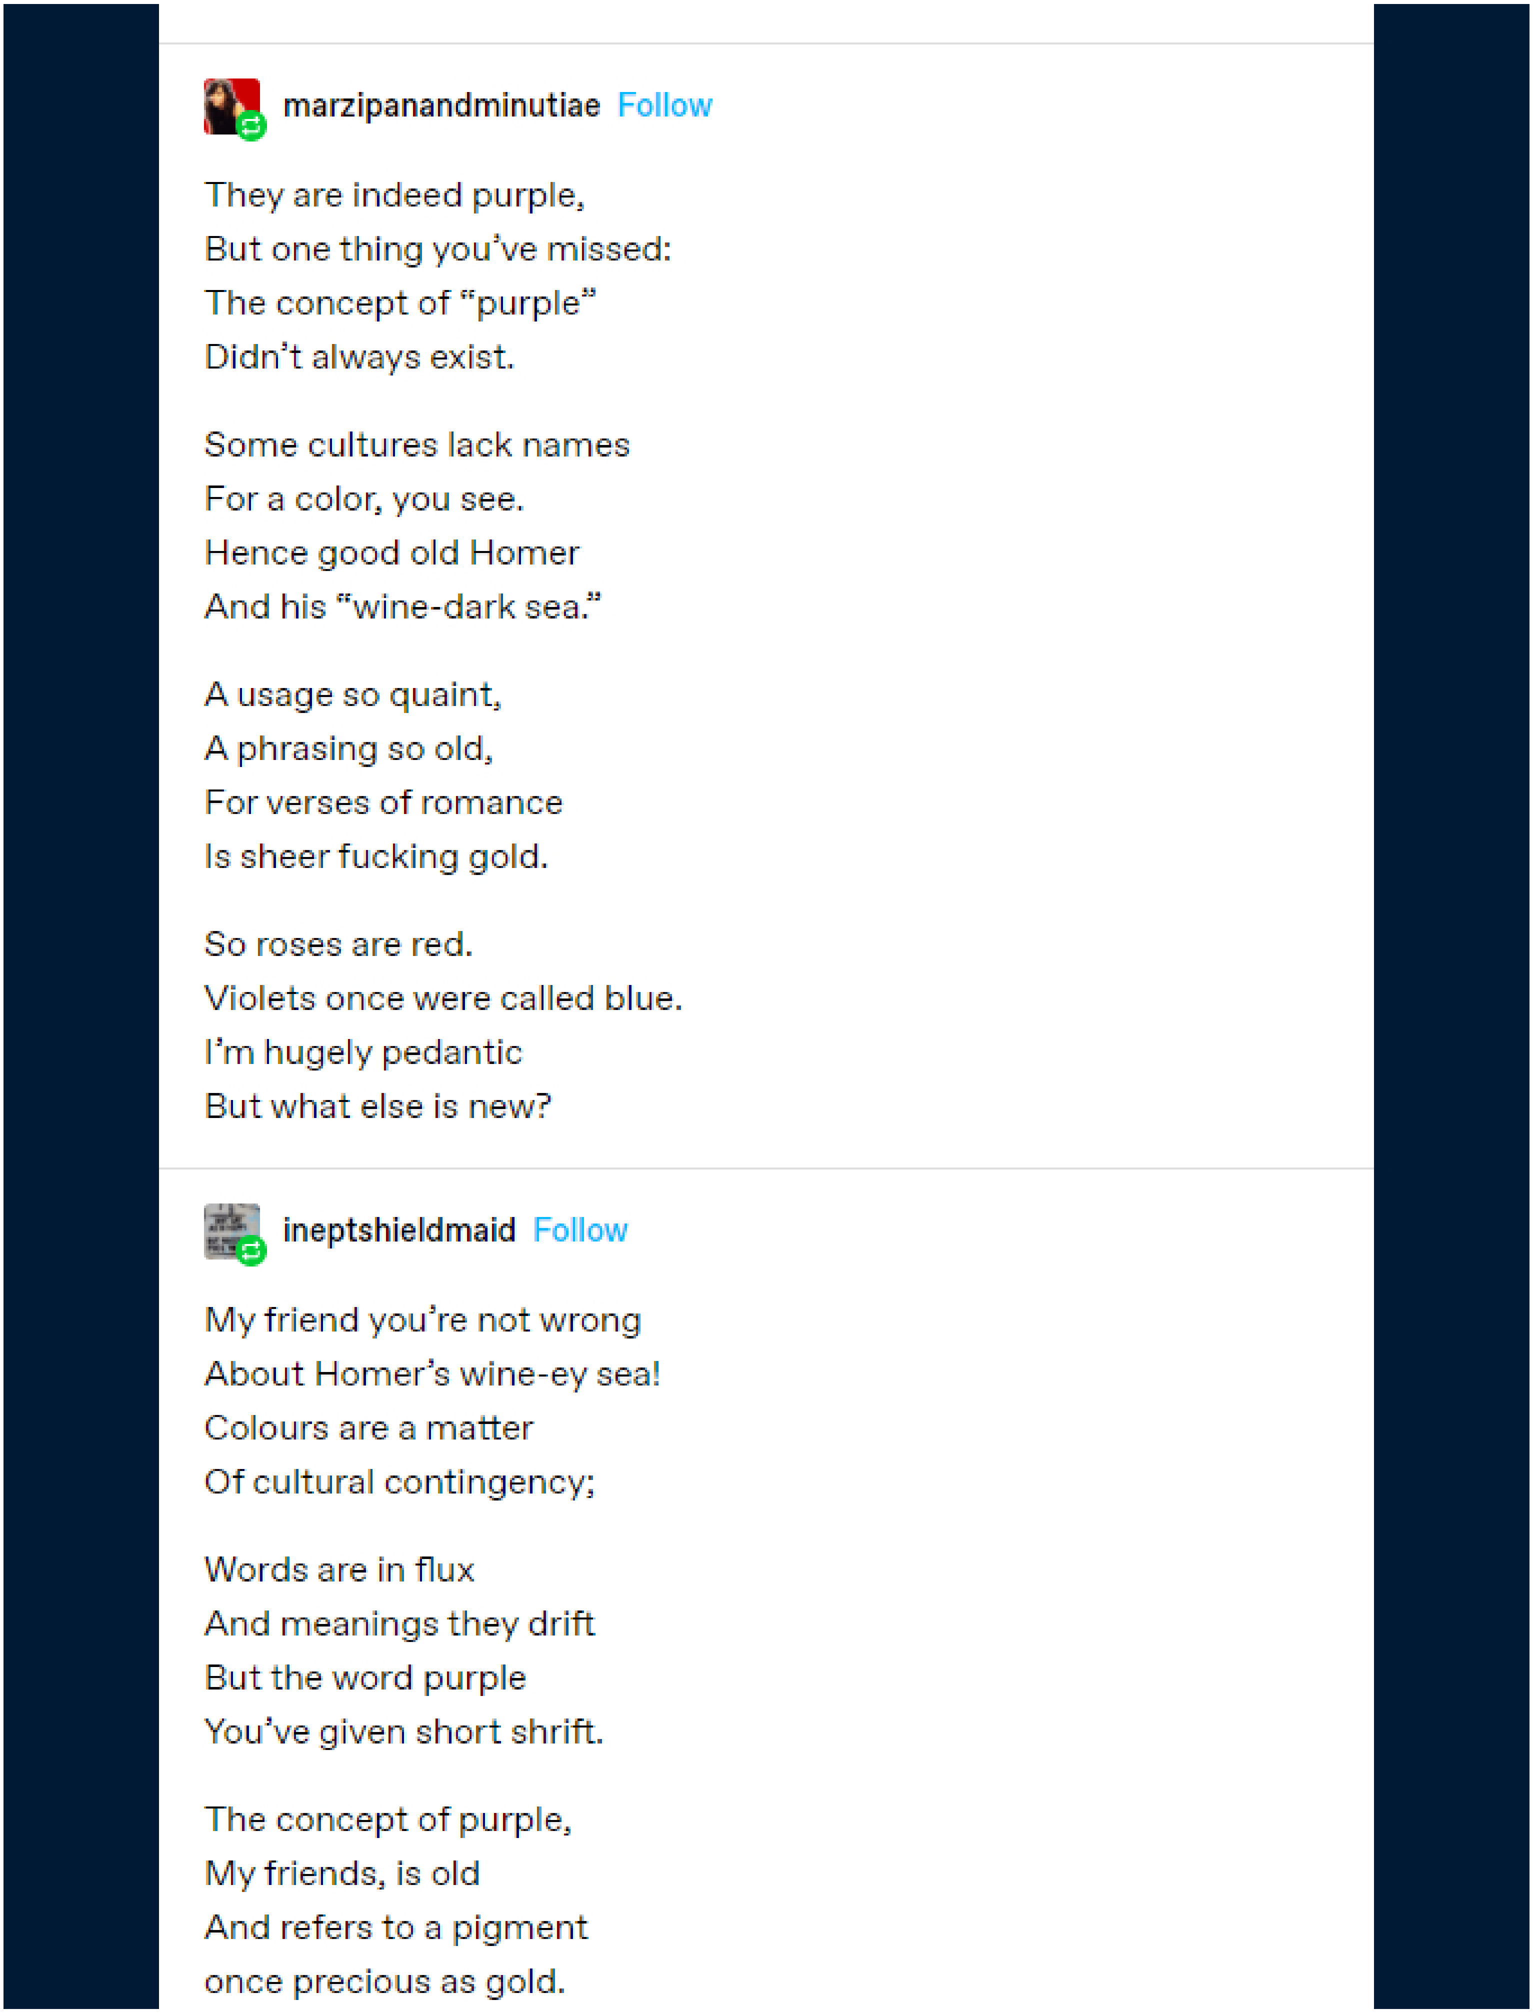
Roses are red, that much is true, but violets are purple, not fucking blue.

feels-for-the-fictional Follow

I have been waiting for this post all my life.



marzipanandminutiae Follow

They are indeed purple,
But one thing you've missed:
The concept of "purple"
Didn't always exist.

Some cultures lack names
For a color, you see.
Hence good old Homer
And his "wine-dark sea."

A usage so quaint,
A phrasing so old,
For verses of romance
Is sheer fucking gold.

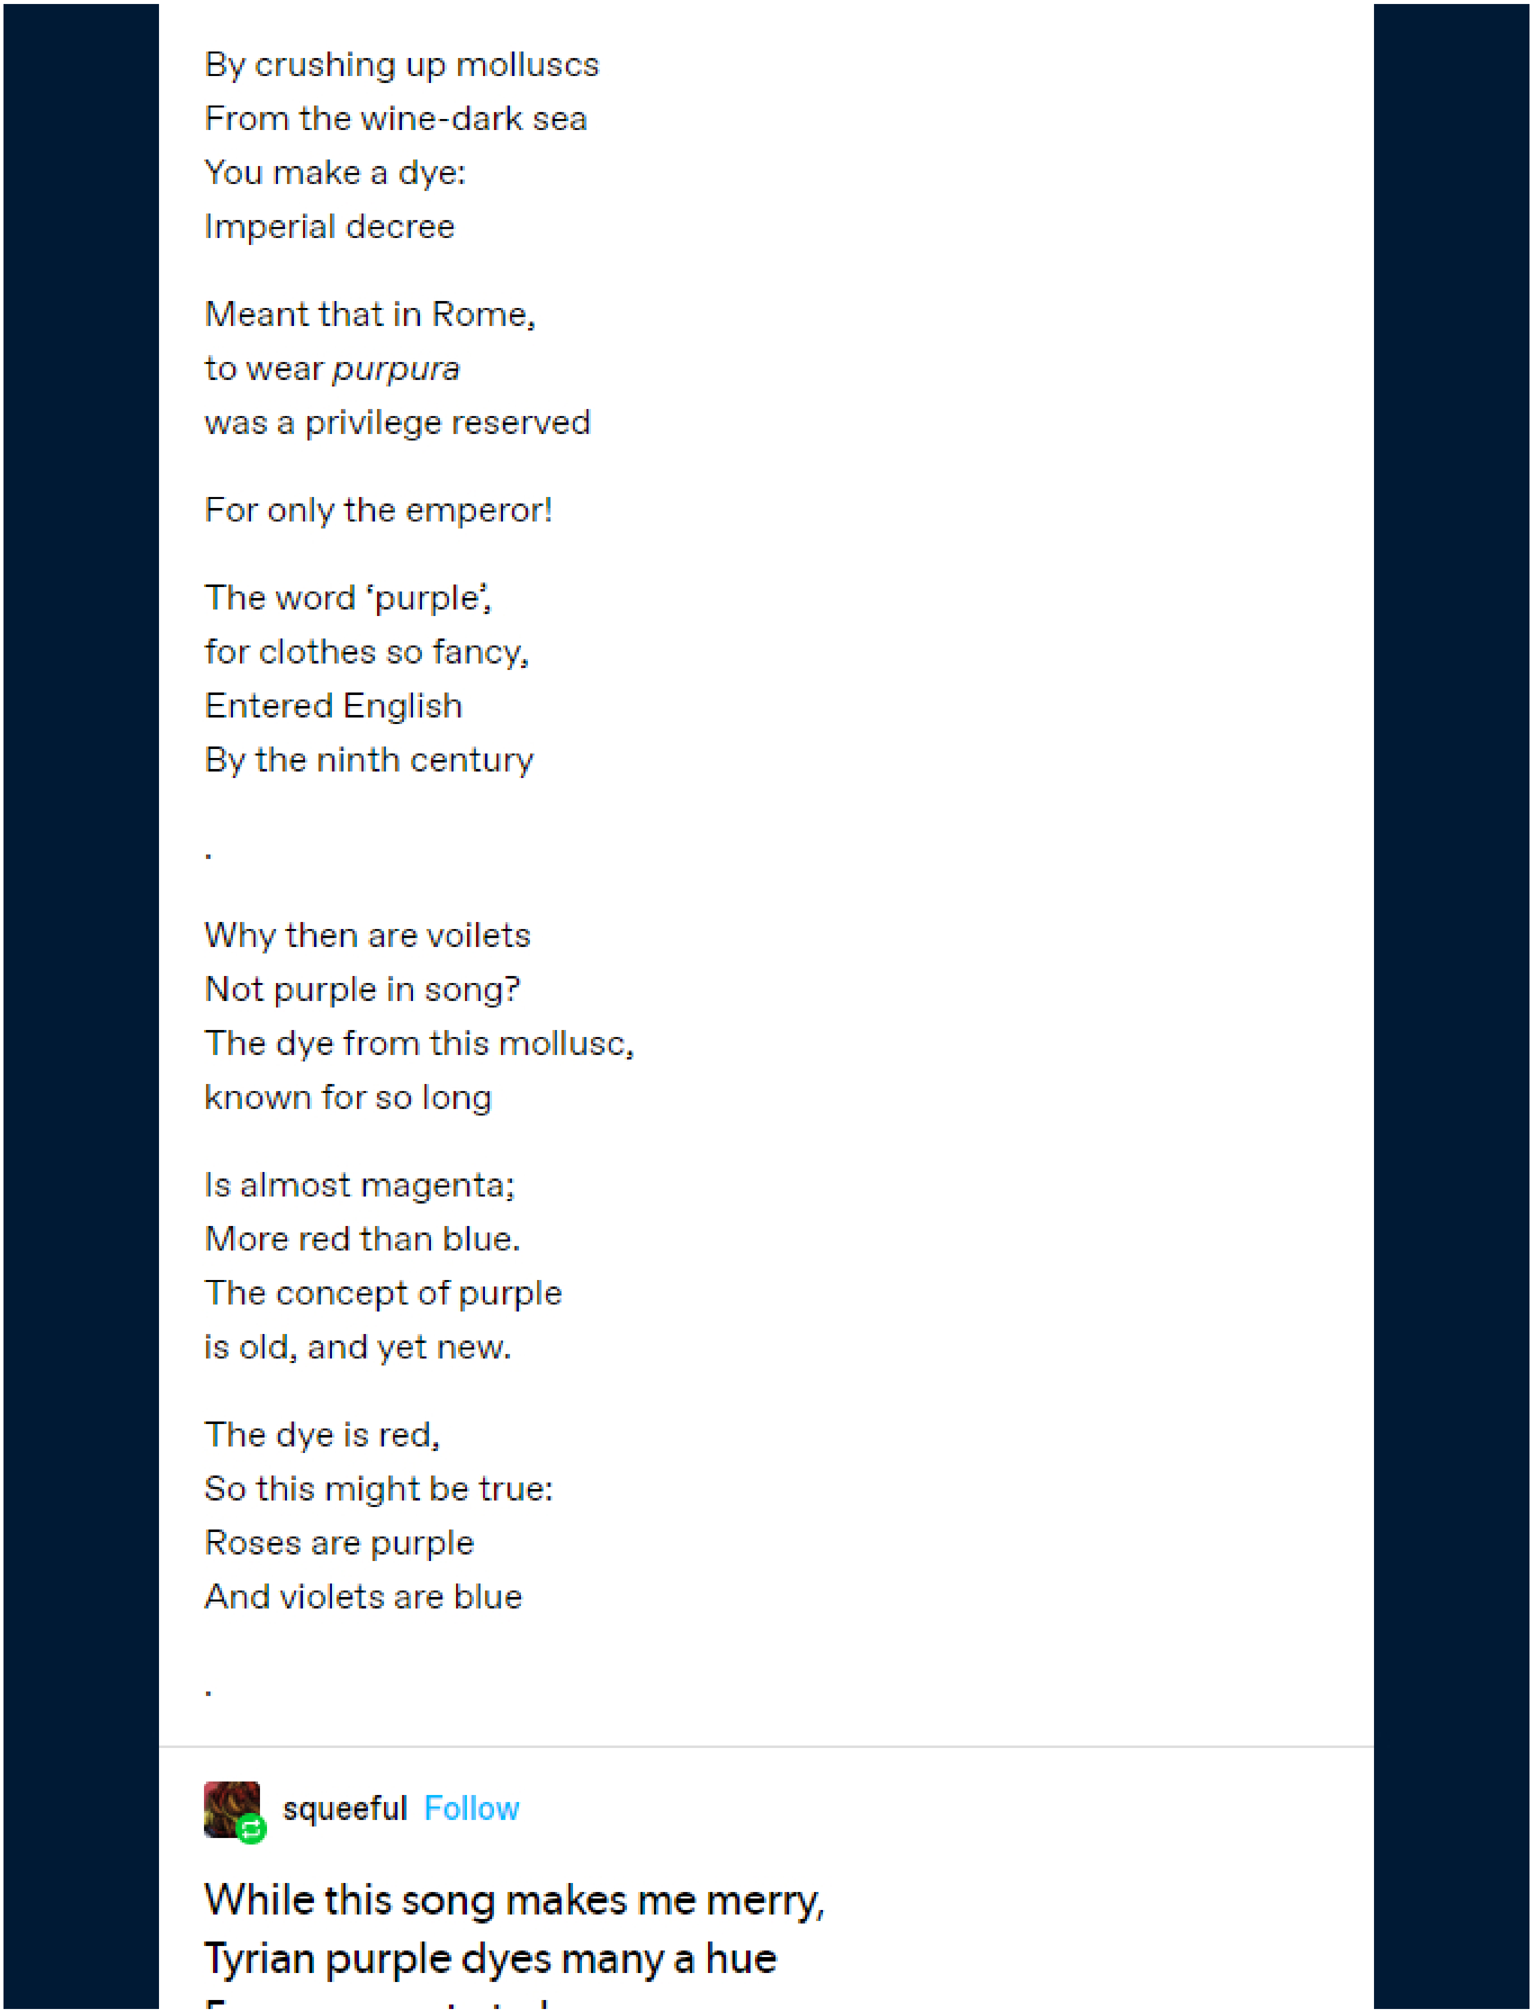
So roses are red.
Violets once were called blue.
I'm hugely pedantic
But what else is new?

ineptshieldmaid Follow

My friend you're not wrong
About Homer's wine-ey sea!
Colours are a matter
Of cultural contingency;

Words are in flux
And meanings they drift
But the word purple
You've given short shrift.

The concept of purple,
My friends, is old
And refers to a pigment
once precious as gold.



By crushing up molluscs
From the wine-dark sea
You make a dye:
Imperial decree

Meant that in Rome, to wear purpura
was a privilege reserved

For only the emperor!

The word ‘purple’,
for clothes so fancy,
Entered English
By the ninth century

Why then are voilets
Not purple in song?
The dye from this mollusc, known for so long

Is almost magenta;
More red than blue.
The concept of purple
is old, and yet new.

The dye is red,
So this might be true:
Roses are purple
And violets are blue

squeeful

While this song makes me merry,
Tyrian purple dyes many a hue

From magenta to berry
And a true purple too.

But fun as it is to watch this poetic race
The answer is staring you right in the face:
Roses are red and violets are blue
Because nothing fucking rhymes with purple.

Purple is prose and as we all know

English is not a tongue neat.

Words are alive, and flexible, they jibe

And from our sick brains they meet:

Rhyming with purple to the lexicon burgle,

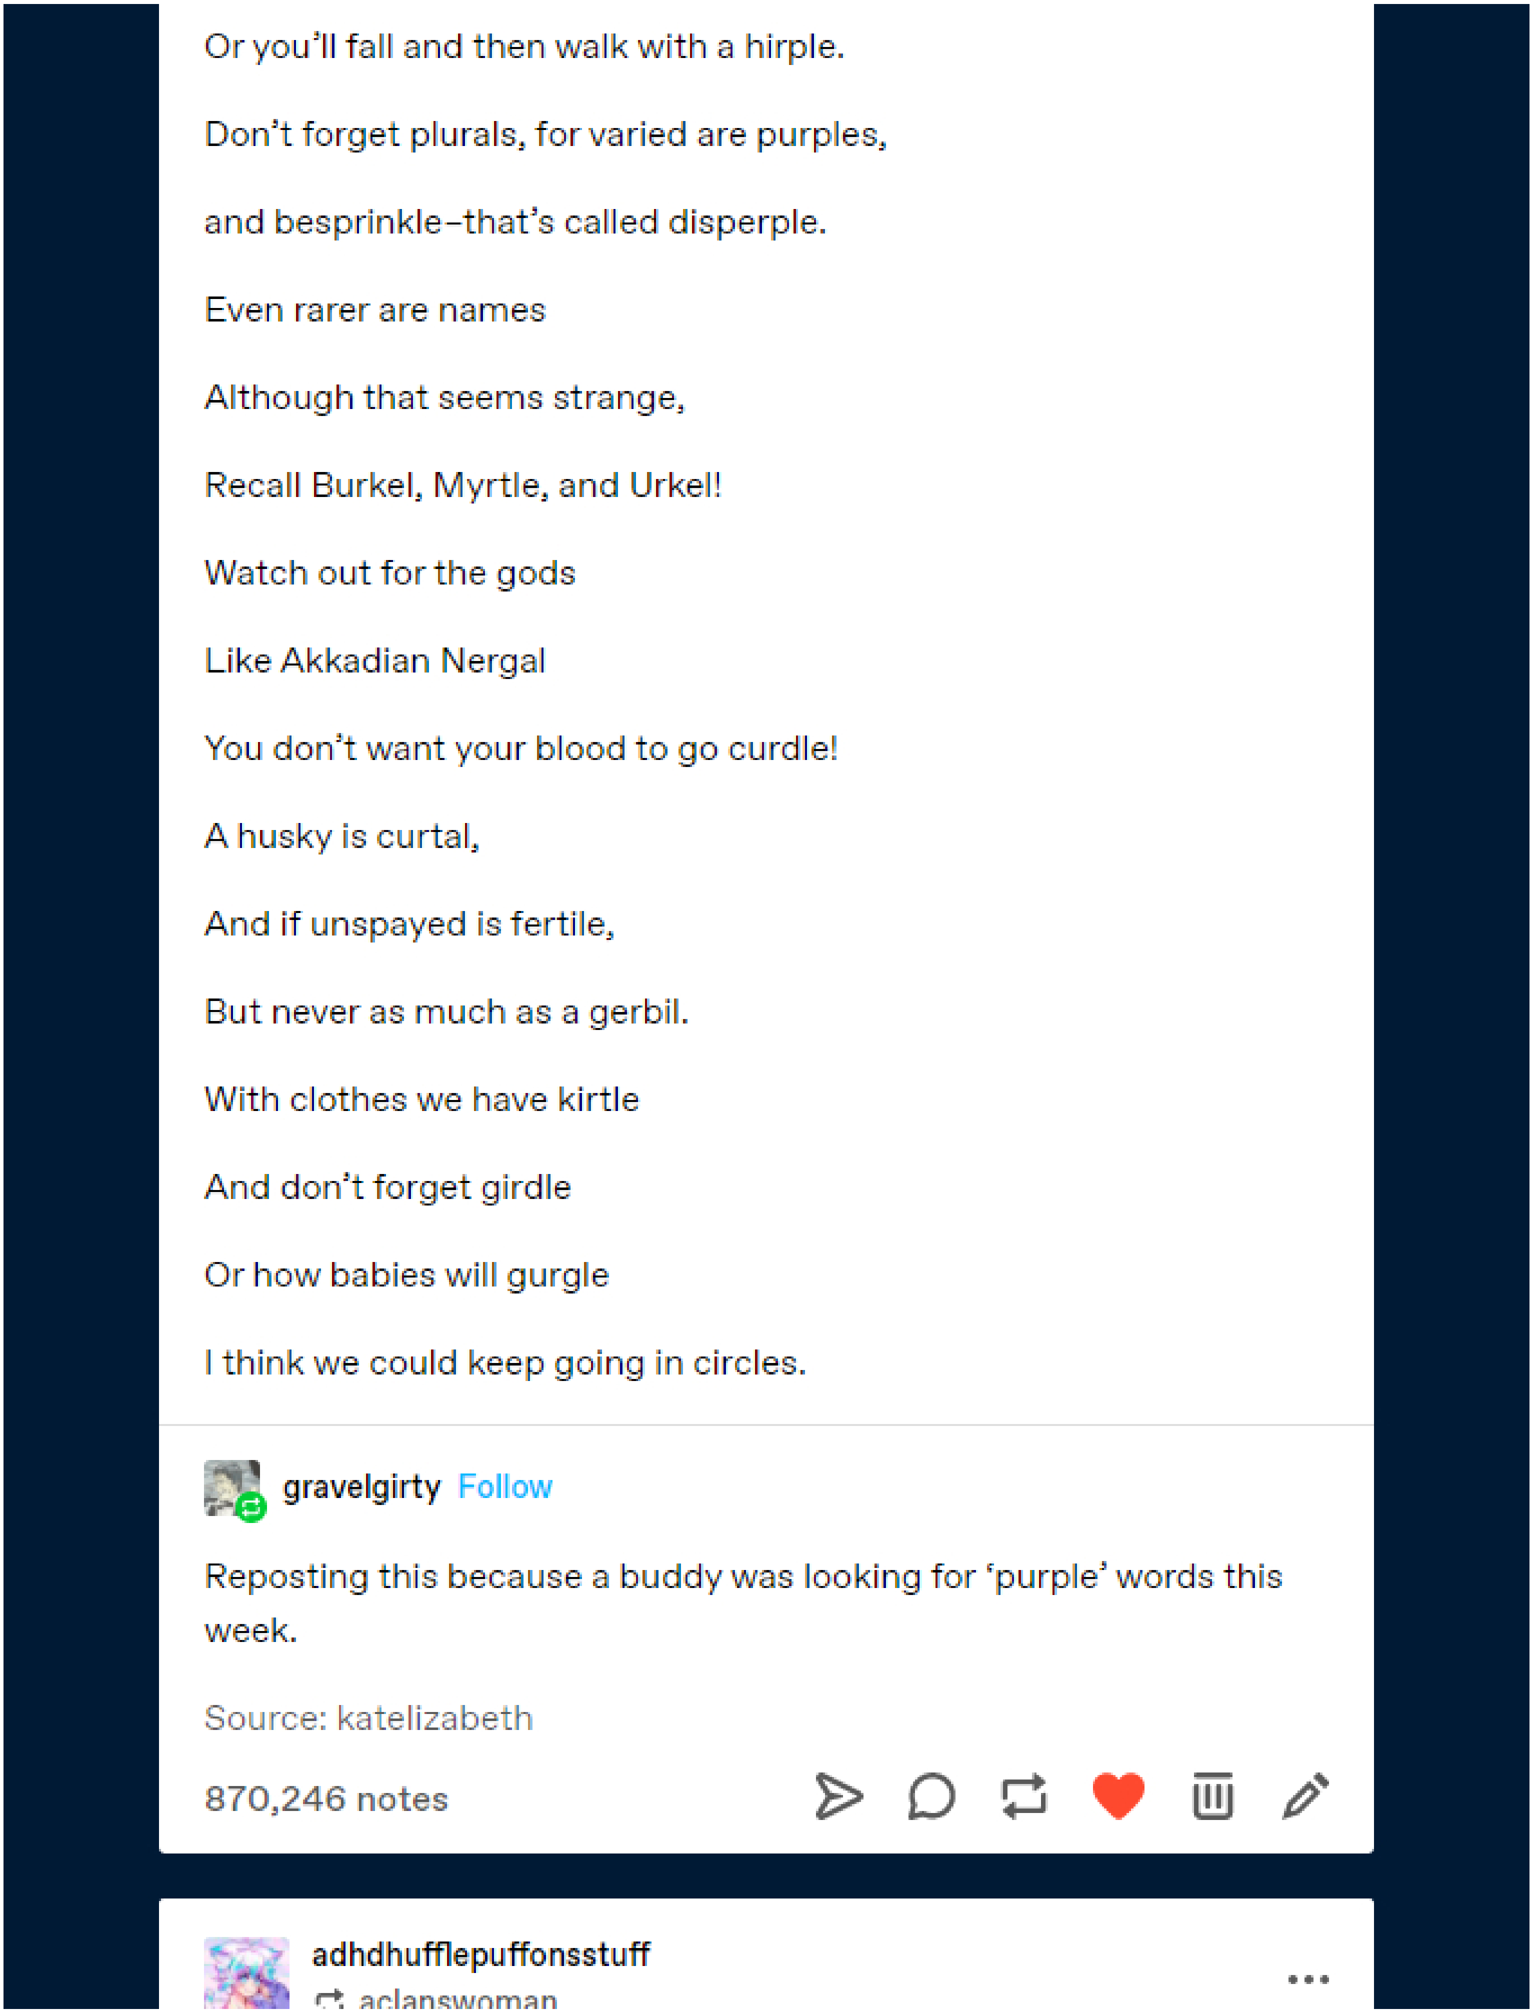
And remember there's more than just herbal

We can color–empurple,

(Alternatively impurple)

And we can also enrage! Bepurple!

You can't ride a horse without a good curple



Or you'll fall and then walk with a hirple.

Don't forget plurals, for varied are purples, and besprinkle–that's called disperple.

Even rarer are names

Although that seems strange,

Recall Burkel, Myrtle, and Urkel!

Watch out for the gods

Like Akkadian Nergal

You don't want your blood to go curdle!

A husky is curtal,

And if unspayed is fertile,

But never as much as a gerbil.

With clothes we have kirtle

And don't forget girdle

Or how babies will gurgle

I think we could keep going in circles.

cursmudgeon

I've seen this post on my dash couple times and was confused by the phrasing till I read it over more closely and I've seen at least one other person confused by it so I'm gonna clarify the point they're making. Kink at pride discourse is likely being used as a wedge issue by right wing trolls to stoke infighting in the queer community. This has been a recruitment tactic for right wing groups for a long time, stoking fears about the corrupting forces of gay/trans/whatever other "deviant" people on children is a very effective way to maintain power for the people who campaign on fighting against our rights and safety. Flattening the discussion of how queer love is policed differently and how things that are considered unremarkable between straight couples suddenly become sexualized in a queer context down to "you just want to show your dick to children" is a very classic homophobic strategy and we should be critical of who is using it. It's very easy to make a sockpuppet account and pretend to be a gay teenager and use that supposed state of innocence as a weapon to stoke infighting and attempt to delegitimize the entire community. It happened during gamergate, it happened during the ace discourse and the mogai discourse on tumblr, it's not surprising that it would happen with "kink at pride" discourse. And the coordinated nature of the harassment around this stuff we should be extra wary of who is saying this stuff and why.

official-cat-noir-cum-sock anyways if any of you need to prove being trans isnt just a “trend” or a “fad”, here are some trans men and women who have been around longer than your boomer family members.

Lili Elbe was a Danish painter and trans woman born in 1882, and she got her bottom surgery in the year 1930, almost 10 years before WWII started. Lili passed away in 1931, as the surgery was still in its experimental phase, and her immune system rejected part of her

in 1930, Dora Richter, a trans woman born in 1891, had her bottom surgery, but she was unfortunately killed in a Nazi attack on the institute where she worked. the institute researched gender and its relation to bio sex, and the Nazis didn't want anyone to research anything related to transgender people, as they thought it was immoral and wanted to purge the world of trans people.

Laurence Michael Dillon was born in May of 1915. He was a scientist and professional rower, who did just as well after transitioning and playing on the mens team, as before when he was playing on the womens' team. he also passed out twice hitting his head, due to hypoglycemia, and when he came to in the hospital the second time, he persuaded his doctor into giving him top surgery. he ended up meeting a plastic surgeon and convinced them to give him plastic surgery in 1962. people heard of a trans man who used to be a British doctor, but Michael just wanted to live in peace. His autobiography inspired Roberta Corwell, a British trans woman, to become the first British trans woman to recieve bottom surgery. He passed away after collapsing on a hike due to his hypoglycemia.

Christine Jorgensen was drafted during WWII, came back in the 50s, and immediately started taking estrogen. she got permission from the Danish Minister Of Justice to get top and bottom surgery. she got the surgeries in 1952, and, due to her being one of the first people to openly transition, she became a celebrity when she returned to NYC. she used her platform to bring light to trans people and their struggles, and became one of the founders of the sexual revolution. she passed away in May of 1989.

Hmmm… so we're getting Owen Wilson in the Loki series.

If you wan't to steer clear of conversations that are full of worries and negativity, please stop reading now.

I don't particularly dislike Owen Wilson, but the things I've seen him in before all have a comedic tone that doesn't really do it for me. Moderately enjoyable in the moment but just a bit silly really. And this is not what I am hoping we'll get for the series. As I've said before, a bit of comedy would be great, but of the sort that lets the characters retain their dignity and leans more towards the witty remark than the pratfall.

So, I guess I'm just worried that this is yet another indication that we're going to get something that is entertaining but has no substance. And I really, really, DON'T want that. :(

And secondly, I selfishly don't want to see Loki/Tom sharing the spotlight with another high profile actor/character. So I'm a little disappointed to see that they've cast another big name in the show. Whether this detracts from the show will depend on how it's written - if Loki is still treated as the main character and he's given sufficient time to shine and grow then that's okay, but after Ragnarok/IW/Endgame I'm not able to assume that's the case.

What I want more than anything is for Loki to be the star of his own show. I want to see the story focus on him, see him use all his abilities, deal with his past, and grow, and for this to be done in such a way that the audience is asked to root for him, not another character. Please don't make Loki the secondary character in his own show!

This popped up in my notifications today and I thought "ooh, this'll be fun to see how much my opinions have changed now that we've seen some trailers!"

But turns out the trailers have clarified exactly nothing.
